Finley, ROBERT, D.D., Presb. divine and philanthropist, b. Princeton, N. J., 1772; d. Athens, Ga., Oct. 3, 1817. N. J. Coll. 1787. D.D. 1817. James, his father, came from Scotland in 1769. From 1793 to 1817, he was connected with N. J. Coll. as tutor or trustee, and 16 June, 1795, was ord. pastor of Baskingridge. He originated the plan of colonizing emancipated blacks in Africa, and was instrumental in forming the Constitution, and in organizing the Colonization Society. In July, 1817, he was installed pres. of Franklin Coll., Athens, Ga. He pub. sermons, and papers on colonization. — Sprague.

Finley, SAMUEL, D.D. (U. of Glasgow, 1763), scholar and Presb. divine, b. Armagh, Ireland, 1715; d. Phila., July 17, 1766. He arrived in Phila., 28 Sept. 1734, and was licensed to preach, Aug 5, 1740. Ord. at N. Brunswick, 13 Oct. 1742. He at once occupied himself in itinerant labors during the remarkable revival of that day. His zeal brought him into trouble; for preaching in N. Haven, Ct., contrary to a law of the Colony forbidding itinerants to enter parishes of settled ministers without their consent, he was seized by the authorities, and carried as a vagrant beyond its limits, in Sept. 1743. From July 14, 1744, to 1761, he was settled at Nottingham, Pa., at the same time carrying on an acad., which acquired a high reputation. On the death of Pres. Davies, he was chosen his successor, removed to Princeton in July, 1761, and left the coll., at his decease, in a flourishing condition. He edited the sermons of Pres. Davies, and pub. some sermons and discussions. WM. PERRONEAU FINLEY, LL.D. 1849, pres. of Charleston Coll, is his grandson. N.J. Coll. 1820.

Finn, HENRY J., comedian and humorist, b. Sydney, Cape Breton, ab. 1785; d. Jan. 13, 1840. In 1799, he came to N.Y.; studied law 2 years, then sailed for Eng. on the invitation of a rich uncle residing there; was shipwrecked, and, after many days' exposure in an open boat, was picked up, and taken into Falmouth. The death of his relative, who made no provision for him, obliged him to resort to the stage for support. He played at the Haymarket Theatre with success, and, returning to Amer. in 1811, made his first appearance at Montreal. He next performed in N.Y. In 1818, he visited Savannah, where he played Mercutio; and in Jan. 1819, the Stranger, for his benefit, to a crowded house. In 1820, he was assoc. ed and pub. of the Savannah Georgian. In 1821 he was again in London, where he lived by miniature-painting. He then attached himself to the Surrey Theatre as leading melodramatic tragedian; but the manager failed, and Finn returned to America. Oct. 22, 1822, he first appeared at the Federal-st. Theatre, Boston, which he at one time managed, and where he long continued a favorite. The bills for his benefit-nights were usually made up of the most extraordinary puns. His forte was broad comedy. Besides being a great wit and punster, he excelled in the more serious walks of the drama, and early in life played Richard, Othello, Mark Antony, &c., with success. In 1829, he gave entertainments similar to Mathews's "At Home," in Portland, and was very successful. He was on his way to his residence in Newport, when lost on the burning steamer "Lexington" in Long Island Sound. He pub. a "Comic Annual," a number of articles in the periodicals, a successful drama "Montgomery, or the Falls of Montmorenci," was a frequent versifier, and turned off a song with great readiness. Fitch, John, inventor, builder of the first steamboat in America, b. E. Windsor, Ct., Jan. 21, 1743; d. Bardstown, Ky., July 2, 1798. He had a common school education; followed various pursuits in his youth, and, having married unhappily, left what property he had to his wife and children, and sought a separate fortune. During the Revol., he was an armorer in the service, afterward a sutler, and as a silversmith, and manufacturer of silver and brass sleeve-buttons at Trenton, N.J., had amassed considerable Continental money. He was next a surveyor in Ky., and, while exploring Ohio early in 1782, was taken by Indians, but returned to his home in Bucks Co., Pa., at the close of the year. During his Western explorations, in which he prepared, engraved on copper, and printed on a press of his own manufacture, a map of the N. W. country, he conceived the idea that the great Western rivers might be navigated by steam. In 1788, he applied for a patent for the application of steam to navigation, he having constructed a boat that could be propelled 8 miles an hour. July 27, 1786, his successful experiment led to the formation of a company in Phila., and the building of a small steam-packet, which conveyed passengers until 1790, when the company failed. In 1793, he tried his steamboat projects in France without success, the times being unpropitious. He afterward went to Ky. to ascertain the condition of his Western property, which he found overrun with squatters, and no encouragement for his steam-projects. He left in a sealed envelope, opened in 1823, a detailed history of his adventures in the steamboat enterprise, inscribed "To my children and to future generations," with a journal and other papers, from which an interesting biography was prepared by Thompson Westcott, and pub. in Phila. in 1867. A Memoir, by C. Whittlesey, is in Sparks's "Am. Biog."

Foote, ANDREW HULL, rear-adm. U.S.N. Son of Gov. S. A. Foote; b. N. Haven, Ct., Sept. 12, 1806; d. N.Y. City, June 26, 1863. Acting midshipman in 1822, he made his first cruise in the schooner "Grampus," sent in 1823 to chastise the W. Indian pirates. Lieut. May 27, 1830; commander, Dec. 19, 1852. He was flag-lieut. in 1833 of the Medit. squad.; and in 1838, as 1st lieut. of the "John Adams," Com. Read, circumnavigated the globe, and took part in an attack on the pirates of Sumatra. While stationed at the naval asylum in 1841–3, he prevailed upon many of the inmates to give up their spirit-rations, being one of the first to introduce the principle of total abstinence from intoxicating drinks in the navy, and continued this effort in "The Cumberland" in 1843–5, besides delivering every Sunday an extemporaneous sermon to the crew. In 1849–52, in com. of the brig "Perry," he was on the African coast, successfully engaged in suppressing the slave-trade. He pub. in 1854 "Africa and the American Flag." He com. in 1856 the sloop "Portsmouth," on the China station. Arriving at Canton just before the commencement of hostilities between the English and Chinese, he exerted himself in protecting American property, and having been, while thus engaged, fired upon by the barrier forts, received permission from Com. Armstrong to demand an apology for this indignity. This being refused, he attacked the forts, 4 in number, with the "Portsmouth" and "Levant;" breached the largest, and, with 280 sailors, landed, and carried it by storm. The remaining forts were successively carried, with a total loss of 40 to the attacking party. The works were of granite, with walls 7 feet thick, mounting 176 guns, and garrisoned by 5,000 men, of whom 400 were killed and wounded. In July, 1861, he became capt., and in Sept. flag-officer, of the flotilla fitting out in the Western waters. Feb. 4, 1862, he sailed from Cairo with 7 gunboats, 4 of them iron-clads, to attack Fort Henry on the Tenn. River. Without awaiting the co-operation of Gen. Grant, he attacked the fort at noon of the 6th, and in 2 hours compelled its surrender. On the 14th, he attacked Fort Donelson; but the fleet was obliged to haul off just as the enemy's water batteries had been silenced, two of the gunboats having become unmanageable. Foote was severely wounded in the ankle by a fragment of a 64-lb. shot. Though on crutches, he proceeded down the Mpi. with his fleet, and a number of mortar-boats, to besiege Island No. 10. After its reduction, Apr. 7, he returned to N. Haven. Regaining his health, he was made chief of the bureau of equipment and recruiting. July 31, 1862, he was app. rear-adm. on the active list. On Admiral Dupont's being relieved from his com. of the S. A. blockade squad., May, 1863, Adm. Foote was app. to succeed him. — See Life by Prof. James Hoppin.

In May, 1842, he began, under the authority of govt., the exploration of an overland route to the Pacific; examined the South Pass of the Rocky Mts.; ascended in Aug. the highest peak of the Wind River Mts., now called Fremont's Peak, and, returning in the autumn of 1842, pub. a report commended by Humboldt in his "Aspects of Nature." In the summer of 1843, in another exped., he explored the Great Salt Lake; reaching Fort Vancouver, near the mouth of the Columbia River, in Nov. Attempting to return by a more southern route, his progress was impeded by deep snows, and his party suffered severely from hunger and cold. Changing his course, he returned through the Great Basin and the South Pass, having exhibited a fortitude and daring rarely surpassed, and was brev. capt. 31 July, 1844. In a third exped. in 1845, he explored the Sierra Nevada, California, &c. In Mar. 1846, he successfully repelled an attack by Mexicans, near Monterey; was maj. comg. batt. of Cal. vols. July–Nov. 1846; app. lieut.-col. mounted rifles, 27 May, 1846, and was app. gov. of Cal. by Com. Stockton, whose authority was disputed by Gen. Kearney. Arrested by the latter, he was tried by a court-martial, and found guilty of mutiny and disobedience. Pardoned by the Pres., but declined the pardon, and resigned his commission. In 1848, he undertook a new exped. across the continent. His guide lost his way; and, after encountering incredible hardship, he returned, with the loss of one-third of his party, to Santa Fé. Renewing his efforts, he successfully encountered the hostile Apaches, and in 100 days reached the Sacramento. In 1849 he settled in Cal., where he had purchased the auriferous Mariposa tract, the title to which, after much litigation, was confirmed by the U.S. Sup. Court in 1855. Commissioner in 1849 to run the boundary-line between the U. S. and Mexico. He used his influence to make California a free State, and was her U.S. senator in 1850–51. In 1850, he received for his scientific services a gold medal from the King of Prussia, and another from the Roy. Geog. Soc., Lond. In 1853, he led, at his own expense, a 5th exped., and succeeded in finding a new route to the Pacific, ab. lat. 38° north. His grandfather Andrew was a merchant of N.Y.; and Peter, his father, a wine-seller. At 17, Philip wrote "The Poetical History of the Prophet Jonah." In 1776, he went in a mercantile capacity to the W. Indies, remaining some time. In 1779, he was a leading contrib. to the U. S. Magazine, edited by H. H. Brackenridge at Phila. In 1780, while on a voyage to the W. Indies, he was captured by the British, and experienced the horrors of a prison-ship in N.Y., afterward the subject of one of his poems. On his release, he became a frequent contrib. of patriotic verses to the Freeman's Journal of Phila. From this unprofitable employment he turned to mercantile affairs, and made frequent voyages to the W. Indies. In 1791, he edited the Daily Advertiser in N.Y., which in Oct. he left for the National Gazette of Phila., being at the same time employed by Jefferson as translating clerk in the State dept., and unsparingly assailing in his journal the policy of Washington. Freneau was a zealous Democrat. He retired to N.J. in 1793, and May 2, 1795, began at Mount Pleasant the Jersey Chronicle, discontinued at the end of the year. In 1797, he edited at N.Y. the Timepiece and Literary Companion. He m., ab. 1782, Elinor, dau. of Samuel Forman of N.J., by whom he had 4 daughters. Freneau's productions "animated his countrymen in the darkest days of '76, and cheered the desponding soldier as he fought the battles of freedom. Campbell and Scott borrowed from him; and Jeffrey predicted that the time would come when his poetry, like Hudibras, would command a commentator like Gray." He pub. "A Translation of the Travels of the Abbé Robin" in N.Y. 1783; "Poems," Phila. 1786; "Miscellaneous Works," 1788; "Poems written between 1768 and 1794," Mount Pleasant, N.J., 1795; "Letters on Various Subjects," &c., by Robert Slender, Phila. 1799; a new edition of his Poems, 1809; "Poems written between 1797 and 1815," 2 vols., N.Y. 1815. Frobisher, Sir Martin, an eminent navigator, b. Altofts, Normanton, Yorkshire, ab. 1539; d. Plymouth, 7 Nov. 1594. Brought up to the sea, and acquiring great skill in navigation, the idea of the discovery of a northwest passage to the Indies excited his ambition; and, after many fruitless attempts to induce merchants to favor his project, he was enabled by the ministers and courtiers of Queen Elizabeth to fit out a private adventure, consisting only of two barks of 25 tons each, and a pinnace of 10, with which he sailed from Deptford in June, 1576. In this enterprise he entered the strait ever since called by his name, and returned to Eng. with some black ore, which, being supposed to contain gold, induced the queen to patronize a second voyage, and lend a sloop of 200 tons from the royal navy for the purpose. The delusion was kept up to a third exped.; but they all proved fruitless. In 1585, Frobisher accomp. Sir Francis Drake to the W. Indies; and, at the defeat of the Spanish Armada, he com. one of the largest ships of the fleet, and was honored with knighthood for his services. In the years 1590, '92, he com. a squadron against the Spaniards, and took many rich prizes. In 1594, he was sent with four ships-of-war to the assistance of Henry IV. of France against the Spanish and Leaguers, when, in an attack on a fort near Brest, Nov. 7, he received a wound, of which he died on his return home. An account of his voyages is in Pinkerton's Coll., vol. 12.

Frontenac (frŏn'-teh-năk'), Louis de Buade, Count de, gov. of Canada, b. France, 1620; d. Quebec, Nov. 28, 1698. Entering the military service, he was a col. at 17, and a lieut.-gen. at 29, having been greatly disting., and covered with scars and honors. He learned the science of war under Maurice of Nassau, serving in Italy, Flanders, and Germany, and was selected by Turenne to head the troops sent to relieve Canada. He succeeded Courcelles as gov. in 1672, built Fort Frontenac (Kingston) in 1673, but, on account of some arbitrary acts, was recalled in 1682. He encouraged and aided La Salle in colonizing the Mpi. Valley, and by posts at Niagara, Mackinac, and in Illinois, assailed the English settlements, and controlled the Indians. Re-appointed in 1688, when her insufficient resources had led the Colony to the brink of ruin, he carried on a vigorous war against the English settlements in N.Y., and their Indian allies the Iroquois, who made several successful inroads to Canada. In 1690, he defeated Admiral Phips and the English fleet before Quebec, in commemoration of which Louis XIV. caused a medal to be struck. Frontenac followed up his success by invading the Mohawk country, and leading an exped. in person against Onondaga and Oneida; while on the coast he menaced Me. and N.Y. He had all the qualities of a great man. He was the terror of the Iroquois; and his activity was only equalled by his courage. His wife, who survived him, had been one of the beauties of the French court, and was a friend of Mme. de Maintenon, the relative of her husband.

Frost, Major Charles, b. Tiverton, Eng., 1632; d. July 14, 1697. Ab. 1636, he accomp. his father, Nicholas, to the Pascataqua River, and settled at the head of Sturgeon Creek. Member of the Gen. Fulton, ROBERT, inventor and successful introducer of steam-navigation; b. Little Britain, Lancaster Co., Pa., 1765; d. New York, Feb. 24, 1815. Of Irish descent. His father d. when he was but 3 years old. He received a com. school education, went to Phila. in 1782, and in 1785 was a miniature-painter there, making money enough to buy a small farm in Washington Co., upon which he placed his mother. He then went to Eng., studied several years under Benj. West, adopted the profession of a civil engineer, and, while at Birmingham, familiarized himself with the steam-engine, then just improved by Watt. Here he devised an improved mill for sawing marble, a machine for spinning flax and making ropes, and an excavator for scooping out the channels of canals and aqueducts. In 1795, he furnished to the Lond. Morning Star essays on canals, and, early in 1796, pub. in Lond. a work on the improvement of canal-navigation. He went to Paris in 1797, resided 7 years with Joel Barlow, and studied languages and the sciences connected with his profession. He offered his invention of the submarine torpedo to the French and Eng. Govts. without success, and in Dec. 1806 arrived in New York. He had, in Sept. 1793, addressed a letter to Earl Stanhope "re specting the moving of ships by the means of steam," and had been aided in France in his experiments by Chancellor Livingston, who had procured an act of the N.Y. legisl. giving to Fulton and himself the exclusive privilege of navigating the waters of the State by steam. In 1807, "The Clermont" was built, and traversed the Hudson at the rate of 5 miles an hour, completely establishing the utility of the invention. His second large boat on the Hudson was "The Car of Neptune," also built in 1807. In 1809, Fulton obtained his first patent from the U.S., and in 1811 took out a second for some improvements in his boats and machinery. They were limited to the simple means of adapting paddle-wheels to the axle of the crank of Watt's engine. Fulton constructed ferry-boats to run between N.Y. and N.J., a boat for Long Island Sound, 5 for the Hudson River, and several for different parts of the U.S., some of them for the Ohio and Mpi. Rivers. In 1811, he was commissioned by the legisl. to explore the route of an inland navigation from the Hudson to the Lakes, and reported in favor of the proposed canal. Having taken out a patent for improvements in maritime warfare, he was in 1814 app. engineer for building floating batteries for coast defence. The first U.S. war-steamer, called "The Demologos," afterward "Fulton the First," was unwieldy, and attained a speed against the current of only 2 1-2 miles an hour; but, as the pioneer of the steam-navies of the world, it was regarded as a marvel, and as a most potent engine of defence. Fulton m. in 1806 Harriet Livingston, a relative of the chancellor. He possessed uncommon tact, energy, patience, and enthusiasm, and was eminently popular. Congress, in 1846, paid $76,300, in full, of the claims of Fulton against the U.S. for inventions and improvements in the application of steam to navigation. Lives of Fulton have been pub. by C. D. Colden in 1817, and in Sparks's "Am. Biog.," by Renwick.

Fulton, WILLIAM S., statesman, b. Cecil Co., Md., June 2, 1795; d. Rosewood, near Black Rock, Ark., Aug. 15, 1844. Balt. Coll. 1813. Furness, WILLIAM HENRY, son of the above, portrait-painter, b. Phila. 1827; d. Cambridge, Ms., March 4, 1867. After studying his art at Dusseldorf, Munich, Dresden, and Venice, he established himself in Phila. as a portrait-painter, married, and removed to Boston, where he attained a high rank in his profession. He first gained reputation by his crayon-drawing. Among his portraits are Mrs. Lathrop of Boston, Miss Emerson of Concord, Wilde the artist, Dr. Furness his father, Lucretia Mott, Chas. Sumner, and Rev. Dr. Barnes.

Gadsden, CHRISTOPHER, Revol. statesman, b. Charleston, S. C., 1724; d. there Aug. 28, 1805. Educated in Eng. under the care of relatives; clerk in a counting-house in Phila. until 21, and after a second visit to Eng. became a merchant in Charleston, and his success enabled him to repurchase the large estate which his father had lost in play with Admiral Anson in 1733. A delegate to the Stamp-act Congress at N.Y. in 1765, he was one of the first in S.C. to foresee the improbability of a reconciliation to Great Britain, and who openly advocated republican principles, and desired the independence of America. He was a correspondent of Samuel Adams, and, like him, was one of the boldest and most resolute of the patriot leaders. A member of the Congress of 1774-5, he was thanked for his services by the S.C. legisl. on his return. Chosen a col. in 1775, he was actively engaged in the defence of Charleston in 1776; was made a brig.-gen. Sept. 16, 1776, and resigned in 1779; was one of the framers of the State constitution in 1778, and as lieut.-gov. of the State, signed the capitulation when Charleston was taken by Sir Henry Clinton in 1780. Carried to St. Augustine he suffered a rigorous confinement of 42 weeks in the dungeon of the castle; was exchanged in June, 1781, and sailed to Phila. Elected gov. in 1782, but declined on account of age and infirmity. Although himself a large loser in property by the Revol., he strenuously opposed in the assembly and council the law confiscating the estates of the Tories.

Gadsden, CHRISTOPHER EDWARDS, D.D. (S.C. Coll. 1815), Prot. Epis. bishop of S.C., b. Charleston, Nov. 25, 1785; d. there June 24, 1852. Y. C. 1804. Grandson of the preceding. Deacon in 1807; priest in 1810; rector of St. John's, Berkeley, 1808; afterward assist. minister of St. Philip's Church, Charleston, of which he was rector from July, 1814, until his death, and was consec. bishop June 21, 1840. Bishop Gadsden pub. a number of sermons and charges, and an essay on the life of Bishop Dehon (1833); and edited the Gospel Messenger, which contained many contributions from his pen.

Gadsden, GEN. JAMES, statesman, b. Charleston, S.C., May 15, 1788; d. there Dec. 26, 1858. Y.C. 1806. Grandson of Christopher. in the Seminole campaign in 1818, in which he disting. himself, and was made a capt., and charged with the construction of works for the defence of the Gulf frontier. App. insp.-gen., rank of col., Oct. 19, 1820. On the reduction of the army in 1822, he was relieved, and for some months assisted Mr. Calhoun, sec. of war. He then became a planter in Fla.; was a member of the territorial council, and, as a commissioner, effected a treaty for the removal of the Seminoles from northern to southern Fla., and was afterward occupied in commerce and in rice-culture near Charleston. App. minister to Mexico in 1853, he negotiated the "Gadsden Purchase," now known as Arizona, for $10,000,000.

Gage, Frances Dana, philanthropist and reformer, b. Marietta, O., Oct. 12, 1808. Her father, Joseph Barker of N. H., was an early pioneer to the West, and she assisted him in his trade of a cooper, having few opportunities of education. At 21, she m. James L. Gage, a lawyer of McConnellsville, O. She was an early advocate with pen and voice for temperance, antislavery, and woman's rights. Presided over a woman's rights convention in Akron, O., in 1851; and her opening speech was remarkable for its sense and pathos. In 1853, she moved to St. Louis, but was branded as an abolitionist, was often threatened with violence, and was thrice a sufferer from incendiarism. She next edited an agric. paper in O.; but on the breaking-out of the war, in which 4 of her sons were engaged, she went South, and ministered to the soldiers and taught the freedmen, working without pay, and was an unsalaried agent of the Sanitary Commission at Memphis, Vicksburg, and Natchez. She was afterward seriously crippled by the overturning of a carriage at Galesburg, Ill. She subsequently lectured on temperance, but was stopped in her career of usefulness by a stroke of paralysis, in Aug. 1867. Under the nomme de plume of "Aunt Fanny," she has written many beautiful stories for children, stanzas and sketches. She was an early contrib. to the Saturday Visitor, and has written for the N. Y. Independent. A vol. of "Poems," and a temperance tale, "Elsie Magoon," are her latest works.

Gage, Thomas, or Friar Thomas of St. Mary, missionary and author, was an Irishman, educated at St. Omer's, and joined the Dominicans; b. 1597; d. 1655. In 1625, he set out with some missionaries from Spain, destined for the Philippine Islands, but, not relishing so distant a mission, went to Guatimala, where, and in other neighboring places, he was a missionary to the Indians. In 1637, he settled as a Protestant minister at Deal, Eng. He pub. "A New Survey of the W. Indies," giving an account of his mission to New Spain, and of his travels, 1648, 4th ed., 1699. Gardiner, JOHN SYLVESTER JOHN, D.D. (U. of Pa. 1813), clergyman and scholar, b. Haverford West, South Wales, June, 1765; d. Harrowgate, Eng. July 29, 1830. At the age of 5 he was sent to his grandfather, Dr. Sylvester Gardiner, in Boston, for education, who placed him under the charge of Master Lovell; but, shortly before the commencement of the Revol., he was removed to Eng., and placed under the care of the celebrated Dr. Parr. In 1787 he was ord. deacon, and assigned the pastoral charge of the parish of St. Helena, near Beaufort, S.C. He removed thence in 1791; took priest's orders; was settled as assist. minister of Trinity Church, Boston, Apr. 22, 1792; and in 1804–5 succeeded Bishop Parker as rector of that church, in which station he remained until his death. While assist. minister, he kept a classical school, which was celebrated. He was disting. for pulpit eloquence, was in the first rank of classical and belles-lettres scholars, and was pres. of the literary club which for a number of years conducted the Anthology and Monthly Review, the precursor of the N. A. Review, to which he was a liberal contributor.

Gardiner, SYLVESTER, physician, b. Kingston, R.I., in 1707; d. Newport, Aug. 8, 1786. Having studied medicine in London and Paris, he engaged in practice at Boston, where he also lectured on anatomy. Acquiring a large estate by the sale of drugs, he invested in the Kennebec purchase, and purchased for himself, and settled, the tract now occupied by the city of Gardiner. He procured emigrants from Germany to cultivate the soil, furnishing them annually with the needed supplies. He contributed liberally to the erection of King's Chapel, Boston, of which he was a warden; promoted the introduction of inoculation for the small-pox; printed and distributed an edition of an excellent book of prayers prepared by himself; built and endowed a church at Gardiner, and presented that town with a valuable library, which was afterwards scattered. Notwithstanding his advanced age, he left Boston when it was evacuated by the British army during the Revolution, taking with him, of all his great estate, but about £400. His lands, about 100,000 acres, were confiscated and sold; but his heirs, through some informality, were re-invested with the property. He returned to Newport in 1785. One of his daughters was m. to Col. Browne, bro. of the first Marquis of Sligo; a younger one was the wife of Robert Hallowell, and the estates of Dr. Gardiner in Me. were entailed on her infant son, Robert, who took the surname of his maternal grandfather.

Garrett, THOMAS, philanthropist, of Quaker parentage, b. Darby, Del. Co., Pa., 21 Aug. 1789; d. Wilmington, Del., January 23, 1871. Bred a scythe and edge-tool maker, he acquired a competency, and in 1820 settled in Wilmington. He became an abolitionist ab. 1807, through the kidnapping of a colored woman from his father's family; and thenceforward assisted all fugitives who applied to him on their way to freedom. May, 1848, in a suit brought against him by the owners of some slaves whom he had aided to escape, he was convicted; and the damages awarded swept away every dollar of his property. Commencing business anew in his 65th year, he amassed a competence. He lived to be honored in the community by which he had formerly been execrated, and to see his hopes for universal freedom realized.

Garrison, WILLIAM LLOYD, leader of the emancipationist movement in the U.S., b. Newburyport, Ms., 12 Dec. 1804. Apprenticed to a shoemaker, and afterward to a cabinet-maker: he preferred the printer's trade, which he learned in the office of the Newburyport Herald. He also contrib. to its columns and to those of the Salem Gazette, in which he manifested his sympathy in the struggle of the Greeks for freedom. In 1826 he established the Free Press at Newburyport, soon discontinued. In 1827 he edited the National Philanthropist in Boston, the first journal to advocate total abstinence. In 1828 he started at Bennington, Vt., the Spirit of the Times, advocating temperance, peace, abolition, and the election of J. Q. Adams to the presidency. Towards the close of 1829, he became assistant editor of Lundy's Genius of Universal Emancipation at Baltimore: previously the advocate of gradual abolition, Garrison made it at once the organ of the doctrine of immediate emancipation. For denouncing as "domestic piracy" the taking of a cargo of slaves from Baltimore to La., he was fined, and imprisoned 49 days, and until Arthur Tappan paid the fine. After delivering a series of lectures on slavery in the principal cities, he established in Boston, 1 Jan. 1831, the Liberator, a weekly, of the most decided and uncompromising antislavery views, discontinued in Dec. 1865, the object for which it was established having been fully accomplished. His denunciations of slavery and slaveholders excited intense exasperation at the South. The Ga. legisl. offered a reward of $5,000 for his arrest and conviction under the laws of that State, which greatly increased his notoriety and the number of his followers. In the spring of 1832 he pub. "Thoughts on African Colonization," in opposition to that scheme. He soon after visited Eng., where he was warmly received by Wilberforce, Brougham, and their associates. While attending an antislavery meeting in Boston, 21 Oct. 1835, he was seized by a mob of "gentlemen of property and standing," from whose violence he was only saved by being locked up in jail, and on the following day was conveyed by the city authorities to a place of safety in the country. Founder of the Amer. Antislavery Society 1 Jan. 1832, and its pres. 1843–65. Founder in 1838 of the N. E. Nonresistance Society. In 1840 he attended the World's Antislavery Convention in Lond., but refused to take his seat because the female delegates from the U. S. were excluded. After long and arduous labor, Mr. Garrison has lived to see his hope of emancipation realized, though not, as he hoped, by moral suasion alone, and without bloodshed. His friends raised and presented to him in Mar. 1868, as a national testimonial for his arduous labors in the cause of antislavery, ab. $30,000. A vol. of his "Sonnets and other Poems" was pub. in 1843; "Selections from his Writings and Speeches," 12mo, 1852. — See Mrs. Stowe's Men of Our Times, 1868.

Garth, GEORGE, a Brit. gen.; d. 1819. Son of John, M. P. for Devizes, and bro. of Gen. Thomas. He entered the first Foot Guards in Sept. 1755; was made brev. col. Feb. 19, 1779; maj.-gen. Nov. 20, 1782; gen. 1801; afterwards gov. of Placentia; a brig.-gen. in Amer. during the Revol. war. In July, 1779, he was second in com. of Tryon's exped. which plundered and destroyed Fairfield and Norwalk, Ct., and served under Clinton in the exped. against Charleston in 1780.

Gartland, FRANCIS X., first R.C. bishop of Savannah; consec. Nov. 10, 1850; d. Sept. 20, 1854.

Gaston, WILLIAM, LL.D. (U. of Pa. 1819), statesman and jurist, b. Newbern, N.C., Sept. 19, 1778; d. Raleigh, Jan. 23, 1844. N. J. Coll. 1796. His father, Dr. Alexander, of Huguenot ancestry, and an ardent Whig, having been shot by Tories Aug. 20, 1781, his early education was conducted by his mother. Adm. to the bar in 1798, he attained the head of his profession in the State. In 1799 he was elected to the State senate from Craven Co.; in 1808 to the H. of delegates, over which he was chosen to preside; and M.C. from 1813 to 1817, where he ranked with Lowndes, Randolph, Calhoun, Clay, and Webster. His speeches upon the Loan Bill and the previous question present some of the finest displays of reasoning and eloquence which our country has furnished. Some of the best statutes of N.C., as well as its judicial organization, are the result of his wisdom. Judge of the Supreme Court of N.C. from 1834 to his d. He assisted the convention in 1835 in amending the State constitution, nearly all the reforms in which he is said to have suggested and elaborated; spoke and voted against the proposition to deprive free colored men of the right of suffrage, which at that time they possessed; and was tendered, but declined, the U.S. senatorship in 1840.

in Essex, Eng., in 1728; d. N.Y. Apr. 10, 1806. Son of a clergyman, and godson of H. Walpole. At an early age he entered the army; rose rapidly to the rank of maj.; and in 1755 was stationed at Halifax; but, joining Braddock's unfortunate exped. in the latter year, he was shot through the body, and for a long time disabled. He recovered, however, in season to join his regt. in the exped. against Martinico in Jan. 1762, in which he was aide to the com.-in-chief Monckton, and rendered efficient service, establishing his reputation as a brave and prudent officer. Maj. 60th Royal Americans, Oct. 27, 1764. After the peace, he purchased a fine estate in Berkeley Co., Va., and devoted himself successfully to agricultural pursuits. At the commencement of the Revol. war, he tendered his services to Congress, who in July, 1775, app. him adj.-gen. with the rank of brigadier; and in the following June, having in May been made maj.-gen., received the chief com. of the army, which had just retreated from Canada. His first step, the withdrawal of the entire American force from Crown Point, was severely censured by many, and considered highly injudicious by Washington, as it opened to the enemy the undisputed navigation of Lake Champlain. A few months after, Gates again joined the com.-in-chief; and the northern army was assigned to Schuyler. He continued with Washington until Mar. 1777, when he resumed his command on the northern frontier, where he was superseded by Schuyler in May, but was reinstated Aug. 4. It was fortunate for Gen. Gates that the retreat from Ticonderoga had been conducted under other auspices than his, and that he took the command when the indefatigable but unrequited labors of Schuyler, and the courage of Stark and his mountaineers, had already insured the ultimate defeat of Burgoyne, who, notwithstanding his unfavorable prospects, would not think of retreat. The severe conflict of Sept. 19, and the defeat of Oct. 7 at Saratoga, were followed by the surrender of Burgoyne, with his whole force, on the 16th, perhaps, in its consequences, the most important achievement of the whole war. Congress passed a vote of thanks to Gen. Gates and his army, and also voted a gold medal for him, with suitable inscriptions. His glory was soon obscured by the intrigues then progressing for elevating him to the station occupied by Washington. Nov. 27, 1777, he was made pres. of the new board of war and ordnance, and Oct. 22, 1778, com. of Eastern Dept. In June, 1780, he received the chief com. of the southern districts. After collecting 3,600 troops, principally militia, he advanced against Cornwallis, whom he met Aug. 16 at Camden, and was totally defeated. This battle terminated the military career of Gen. Gates, whose singular fortune it was to conduct the most prosperous and the most disastrous of the military enterprises in this war. He was removed from com. and suspended from service until inquiry should be had as to his conduct. He retired to his farm in Berkeley Co., and, after a long and tedious inquiry, he was finally acquitted, and reinstated in his com. in 1782. When peace was made, he retired to his Va. estate, and in 1790 removed to N.Y., having first emancipated all his slaves, and provided for such of them as could not provide for themselves. He was then presented with the freedom of the city, and in 1800 was elected to the State legisl., but did not serve.

Gates, WILLIAM, brev. brig.-gen. U.S.A., b. Ms. 1788; d. N.Y. Oct. 7, 1868. West Point, 1806. Son of Capt. Lemuel, Revol. officer of Ms., who d. Oct. 1, 1806. A. 13 Mar. 1865. He was at the capture of York, Canada, and in the bombardment of Fort George; was stationed at Fort Moultrie during the nullification troubles in 1832; took an active part in all the Indian wars; personally took Osceola prisoner; escorted the Cherokees to the Indian country; com. the 3d Art. in the Mexican war; and had been 62 years in service. His son COLLINSON REED, disting. in the Florida and Mexican wars, d. Fredericksburg, Texas, June 28, 1849, a. 33. West Point, 1836.

Gay, EBENEZER, D.D., clergyman, b. Dedham, Ms., Aug. 26, 1696; d. March 18, 1787. H.U. 1714. He was settled over the church at Hingham, Ms., June 11, 1718, to which he ministered 69 years and 9 months. On his 85th birthday he preached a sermon from the text, "Lo, I am this day fourscore and five years old," which, under the title of "The Old Man's Calendar," has been frequently repub. in America, went through several editions in Eng., and was translated into one or two of the languages of Continental Europe. Many of his sermons were pub., and had, in their day, a high repute. He was a man of great learning and wit. Liberal in theology. He was a Tory in politics, and suffered persecutions from his own parishioners during the Revol.

Gay, MARTIN, M.D. (H.U. 1826), a disting. chemist and physician. Great-grandson of Rev. Ebenezer. B. Boston, 16 Feb. 1803; d. there 12 Jan. 1850. H.U. 1823.

Gay, WINCKWORTH ALLAN, landscape-painter, bro. of Martin, b. Hingham, Ms., Aug. 18, 1821. While young, he became a pupil of Weir, prof. of drawing of West Point Acad., and subsequently studied 5 years in Europe, part of the time under Troyon in Paris. His style is that known as the modern French. "A scene in the White Mountains," painted for the Boston Athenæum, and another, called "Near Fontainebleau," well exemplify his style. His views of Nantasket Beach and rocks have attracted much attention; and he excels in coast-scenery.

Gayarre (gī'-ä'-rā'), CHARLES E. ARTHUR, lawyer and historian, b. N. Orleans, Jan. 3, 1805. Educated at the Coll. of N. Orleans. In 1826 he went to Phila. and studied law; was adm. to the bar in 1829; in 1830 was elected to the legisl.; in 1831 was app. dep. atty.-gen.; in 1833 pres. judge of the City Court of N. Orleans; and in 1835 he was elected a U.S. senator; but ill health prevented him from taking his seat. After visiting Europe,

Giddings, JOSHUA REED, statesman, b. Athens, Pa., Oct. 6, 1795; d. Montreal, May 27, 1864. His parents were among the first settlers of Ashtabula Co., O. In 1812 he enlisted as a substitute for an elder bro., and was in two severe engagements with the Indians near Sandusky Bay. He afterward taught school; was adm. to the bar in 1820; was a member of the legisl. in 1826; and M.C. from 1838 to 1861. An active abolitionist, he supported John Quincy Adams upon the right of petition, and became a prominent champion of the abolition of slavery and the slave-trade in the District of Columbia and the Territories. Feb. 9, 1841, he delivered his first antislavery speech upon the Indian war in Fla., which he contended was a proslavery contest. His resolutions of March 21, 1842, in reference to "The Creole," a vessel, which, while engaged in transporting slaves from Va. to New Orleans, was captured by them, and taken into Nassau, created intense excitement. A resolution censuring the conduct of Mr. Giddings having been adopted by 125 to 69, he instantly resigned his seat, but was re-elected by a large majority. He opposed the annexation of Texas. In 1850 he took a prominent part in opposing the "Compromise Measures," especially the fugitive-slave law; was conspicuous also in the debates upon the repeal of the Mo. Compromise, and in those upon the subsequent troubles in Kansas. May 8, 1856, while addressing the house, he suddenly fell to the floor in a state of unconsciousness, from which, however, he soon revived. Jan. 17, 1858, he fell again in the same way, and was compelled, for a time, to be absent from his post. Consul-gen. to Canada from 1861 to his death. In 1843 he wrote a series of political essays signed "Pacificus." A vol. of his speeches was pub. in 1853; in 1858 "The Exiles of Florida;" and in 1864 "A History of the Rebellion, 1861–3."

Gignoux, FRANÇOIS REGIS, landscape painter, b. Lyons, France, 1816; studied under Delaroche and Vernet. Came to the U.S. in 1840, settled in N.Y., and was first pres. of the Brooklyn Art Acad. Among his noted pictures are "Niagara in Winter," "Virginia in Indian Summer," "Four Seasons in America," "First Snow," "Dismal Swamp," "A Winter in Vermont," "Niagara by Moonlight," and "First Snow in the Adirondacks."—Tuckerman.

Gifford, SANFORD ROBINSON, painter, b. Greenfield, N.Y., July 10, 1823. His father is propri. of large ironworks at Hudson. He studied the elements of his art with John R. Smith in N.Y., and continued his studies in Europe. He did duty with the N.Y. 7th regt. in 1861. His best works are "The Wilderness," "The Coming Rain," "Coming Storm," "Quebec," "Camp of the 7th Regiment," "On the Hudson," "First Skating of the Season," "Mount Washington," and "Morning in the Mountains." — Tuckerman.

Gilbert, SIR HUMPHREY, a disting. English navigator, b. Dartmouth, Devonshire, in 1539; d. at sea, Sept. 9, 1583. After studying at Eton and Oxford, he embraced the military profession. For his services in Ireland in suppressing a rebellion, he was made com.-in-chief and gov. of Munster, and knighted by the lord-deputy in 1570. He soon afterwards returned to Eng., where he m. a rich heiress. In 1572 he sailed with a re-enforcement of 9 ships for Col. Morgan, who at that time meditated the recovery of Flushing; and, on his return, pub. his "Discourse to prove a Passage by the North-West to Cathaia and the E. Indies." June 11, 1578, Gilbert obtained from Queen Elizabeth letters-patent, empowering him to discover and possess any lands in N.A. then unsettled. This was the first colonial charter granted by Eng. He accordingly sailed to Newfoundland in 1579; but a violent storm compelled him to return. June 11, 1583, he sailed a second time with 5 ships, and, landing at Newfoundland, took possession of the harbor of St John's. By virtue of his patent, he granted leases to several families; but, though none of them remained there at that time, they afterwards settled in consequence of these leases: so that Sir Humphrey deserves remembrance as the real founder of England's American possessions. In this exped. his half-bro. Raleigh was a joint adventurer. Aug. 20, 1583, Gilbert put to sea again in a small sloop to explore the coast: he then steered homeward; but his small bark foundered at sea, and all on board perished.

Gilbert, MR. and MRS. JOHN GIBBS. Mr. G. was b. Boston, 1809. Girard, STEPHEN, merchant and banker, b. near Bordeaux, France, May 21, 1750; d. Phila. Dec. 26, 1831. He sailed as cabin-boy to the W. Indies and N.Y. ab. 1760; rose to be master and part owner of a coasting-vessel; and earned enough to establish himself in business in Phila. in 1769. He traded to the W. Indies until the war, when he opened a grocery and liquor shop, at first in Phila. and afterward at Mount Holly, where he made money out of the American soldiers. In 1780 he resumed his dealings with the W. Indies and N. Orleans; was for a time in partnership with his brother John, but laid the foundation of his wealth by a profitable lease of a range of stores, and by the negro insurrection in St. Domingo. Two of his vessels were then in one of the ports of the island; and many of the planters placed their treasures in them for safety, but were afterward cut off with their entire families. About $50,000 worth of property, whose own- ers could not be found, thus remained in Mr. Girard's hands. By his remarkable capacity for business and his strictness in money-matters he became one of the richest merchants in the country. During the prevalence of the yellow- fever in Phila. he not only made liberal dona- tions of money, but performed in person the duties of physician and nurse. Having in 1812 purchased the building and much of the stock of the old U.S. Bank, he commenced business as a private banker. During the war of 1812, he took the whole of a govt. loan of $5,000,000. He contrib. liberally to all public improvements, and adorned the city of Phila. with many handsome buildings. Of his prop- erty, amounting at his death to nearly 9 millions, comparatively little was bequeathed to his relatives. Besides large bequests to various public institutions, he gave to the city of Phila., for improvement of its streets, buildings, &c., $500,000; for the improvement of canal-navigation in Pa., $300,000. His principal bequest was the sum of $2,000,000, besides the residue of a certain portion of his estate, together with a plot of ground in Phila., for the erection and support of a coll. for orphans. It was opened Jan. 1, 1848. The main building is the finest specimen of Grecian architecture in America. By a provision of his will, no ecclesiastic, missionary, or minister, of any sect whatever, is to hold any connection with the coll., or be adm. to the premises even as a visitor; but the officers of the institution are required to instruct the pupils in the purest principles of morality, and leave them to adopt their own religious opinions. — See Life by S. Simpson, 12mo, Phila. 1832.

Godfrey, THOMAS, inventor of the quadrant commonly called Hadley's, b. Phila.; d. Dec. 1749. He was by trade a glazier. By his own unaided efforts, he mastered such mathematical treatises as came in his way, and afterwards learned Latin that he might acquaint himself with the mathematical works in that language. He borrowed Newton's "Principia" of Sec. James Logan, to whom, ab. the year 1730, Godfrey communicated the improvement he had made in Davis's quadrant, by which he was so much struck, that in May, 1732, he addressed a letter to Dr. Edmund Halley in Eng., describing fully the construction and uses of Godfrey's instrument. No notice, however, was taken of it by Halley; and, after an interval of a year and a half, Logan transmitted a copy of the letter, together with Godfrey's account of his invention, to Peter Collinson, engaging him to place them before the Royal Society. This was accordingly done; but Mr. Hadley, the vice-pres. of the society, had already presented there a paper, dated May 13, 1731, and inserted in "The Phil. Transactions" for that year, describing a reflecting quadrant of the same character, which he claimed as his invention. It was decided that both were entitled to the honor of the invention; and the society sent to Godfrey, as a reward, household furniture to the value of £200, instead of money, on account of his habits of intemperance.

Godfrey, THOMAS, poet, son of the preceding, b. Phila. 1736; d. Aug. 3, 1763, near Wilmington, N.C. Goffe, WILLIAM, maj.-gen. under Cromwell, and a regicide, b. ab. 1605; d. Hadley, Ms., 1679. He was a fervent Puritan, a devoted adherent of Cromwell, and one of the best officers of the Parliamentary army. He left London before the Restoration, and with his father-in-law, Gen. Whalley, arrived in Boston, July, 1660. Well received by Gov. Endecott, they resided at Cambridge till Feb. 1661, when, learning that they were not included in the act of indemnity, they removed to N. Haven, and were secreted by Dep.-Governor Leet and Mr. Davenport. They afterwards lived in a cave at West Rock, and in the neighboring towns, eluding their pursuers by removing from house to house, living in mills, in the clefts of rocks on the seashore, and in forest-caves; but in Oct. 1664 removed to Hadley, and were concealed 15 years in the house of Rev. Mr. Russel. When the Indians attacked that town, Sept. 1, 1675, Goffe, placing himself at the head of the townspeople, attacked and repulsed them. He immediately disappeared, and the astonished inhabitants, to whom he was unknown, regarded him as an angel sent for their deliverance.

Gordon, WILLIAM, D.D. (N. J. Coll. 1778), clergyman and historian, b. Hitchin, Eng., 1728; d. Ipswich, Eng., Oct. 19, 1807. He was settled over a large Independent society at Ipswich; afterward at Old Gravel Lane, Wapping; and came to Amer. in 1770. After preaching a year to the 3d Church in Roxbury, he was ord. there July 6, 1772. During the Revol. he took an active part in public measures, and, while chaplain to the Prov. Congress of Ms., preached a Fast sermon, strongly expressing his political sentiments. He was dismissed from this post, as the legisl. regarded his prayers as intended rather to dictate their measures than to implore the divine direction on them. Returning to Eng. in 1786, he in 1788 pub. his "History of the Rise, Progress, and Establishment of the Independence of the U.S.," in 4 vols. 8vo, a minute and generally faithful narrative of facts. This work produced him 300 pounds. Its value, however, was impaired by the expurgation of such passages as might endanger prosecution. Subsequently settled at St. Neot's, Huntingdonshire. The failure of his mental powers caused his resignation, and removal to his connections at Ipswich. He pub. a plan of a society for making provision for widows by life-annuities, 1772; the first anniversary sermon after the Decl. of Indep. July 4, 1777; an abridgment of Edwards on "The Affections;" and a number of sermons. — See Waterhouse's Junius.

Gosnold, Bartholomew, an English voyager to Amer.; d. Va. Aug. 22, 1607.
After the failure of Raleigh, in which he was concerned, to colonize Va., he com. an exped., fitted out at the cost of the Earl of Southampton, for planting a colony in N.E. Mar.
26, 1602, he sailed from Falmouth with one small vessel and 20 colonists. Instead of sailing, as usual, by the Canaries and West Indies, he steered directly across the Atlantic, reached Ms. Bay 14 May, and landed on Cape Cod, which he named. Sailing around the Cape, and stopping at the island now known as No Man's Land, Gosnold landed at the mouth of Buzzard's Bay, and planted his colony on an island which he christened Elizabeth, and now known by its Indian name of Cuttyhunk. The hostility of the Indians, scarcity of provisions, and disputes ab. a division of profits, discouraged them; and they returned to Eng., where they arrived 23 July, taking a cargo of sassafras-root, then highly esteemed as a medicine, cedar, furs, and other commodities. Gosnold then organized a company for colonization in Va., led by Wingfield, Hunt, and Capt. John Smith. A charter was granted them by James I., Apr. 10, 1606
the first under which the English were planted in Amer.; and Dec. 19, 1606, he sailed with 3 small vessels and 105 adventurers, only 12 of whom were laborers. After a tedious voyage, they sailed up the James River, which they named after the king; landed ab. 50 miles above its mouth, and founded Jamestown, notwithstanding the remonstrances of Gosnold on account of its unhealthy situation on low, marshy ground. Sickness and other causes destroyed 50 of their number before autumn, among them the projector of the colony.

Gosse, Philip Henry, an Eng. zoölogist, b. Worcester, Apr. 6, 1810. He resided in Newfoundland in 1827–35, occupied in mercantile pursuits, and collecting insects, and making colored drawings of them. He removed to L. Canada, where he studied entomology 3 years, and afterwards travelled in the U.S., making in Alabama numerous draw-

Gough, John B., lecturer on temperance, b. Sandgate, Kent, Eng., Aug. 22, 1817. His parents were poor, and he contrib., by exercising his talent as a reader, to their scanty resources. At 12 he came to Amer. as apprentice to a tradesman, with whom he settled on a farm in Oneida Co., N.Y. In Dec. 1831 he obtained employment in N.Y. City as a bookbinder. He soon fell into habits of dissipation, and was frequently thrown out of employment. To such degradation did he sink, that, night after night, he sang comic songs, and played the buffoon, to the habitués of the lowest grog-shops, who in return supplied him with drink. He m. in 1839, and became a bookbinder on his own account; but intemperance prevented his success. He had suffered from delirium tremens, had lost his wife and child, and was reduced to the utmost misery, when a Quaker invited him in the street to take the temperance pledge. Having told his story at a temperance-meeting, he at once became a leading orator in the temperance cause. In 1842 some of his former companions induced him to violate his pledge; and he confessed the fact at a public meeting at Worcester. Since 1843 he has labored incessantly in behalf of temperance, with ability and success. In 1853 he went to Eng., spoke and lectured in London and in the principal towns, creating a remarkable impression. His Autobiography and a vol. of his orations were pub. in 1845. A sketch of his life, by Rev. W. Reid, was pub. in 1854.

Gould, Augustus Addison, M.D. (H.U. 1830), naturalist and physician, b. New Ipswich, N.H., Apr. 23, 1805; d. Boston, Sept. 15, 1866. H.U. 1825. He practised in Boston, lectured frequently on scientific subjects, and for 2 years taught botany and zoölogy at H.U. In 1855 he delivered the annual discourse before the Ms. Medical Society, entitled "Search out the Secrets of Nature," and in 1856 became a visiting physician to the Ms. Gen. Hospital. Member of many learned societies, and pre-eminent as a conchologist. He pub. a translation of De Lamarc's "Genera of Shells," 1833; "System of Nat. Hist.," 1833; translation of Gall's works; the "Invertebrate Animals of Ms.," 1841; "Principles of Zoölogy," 1848; "Mollusca and Shells of the U.S. Explor. Exped. under Capt. Wilkes," 1852; the completion of Dr. A. Binney's "Land Mollusks of the U.S.," 1851–5; "The Mollusca of the N. Pacific Exped. under Capts. Ringgold and Rogers;" and numerous articles in medical magazines, the Boston Journal of Nat. Hist., the *Amer. After working a few months as a printer in Erie, Pa., he went in Aug. 1831 to N.Y. City, where he worked at his trade. 1 Jan. 1833, in partnership with Francis Story, he began the Morning Post, the first penny daily ever published, soon discontinued. In Mar. 1834, with Jonas Winchester, he founded the New-Yorker, a literary weekly, neutral in politics, of which he was editor. It lived 7 years, but was not profitable pecuniarily. In 1838–9 he edited the Jeffersonian, and in 1840 the Log-Cabin (Whig campaign papers), which gave him a reputation as an able political writer. Apr. 10, 1841, he founded the N. Y. Tribune, of which Henry J. Raymond was assist. editor, which soon took the stand it has since maintained as a thoroughly-appointed independent and spirited journal. He advocated Clay's election in 1844; afterward assumed a more decidedly hostile attitude to slavery; and as a member of Congress in 1848–9 opposed the abuses of the mileage system. He supported in successive presidential campaigns Gen. Scott in 1852, J. C. Fremont in 1856, and Abraham Lincoln in 1860; having exerted his influence against the nomination of W. H. Seward in the Chicago convention of that year. He favored universal amnesty and universal suffrage at the end of the civil war, and offered himself as bail for Jefferson Davis in May, 1867. In 1851 he visited Europe, and was chairman of one of the juries at the World's Fair. His letters to the Tribune, describing his travels, were pub. with the title, "Glances at Europe." In 1859 he went to California by way of Kansas and Utah. He has gained special distinction by his efforts toward the emancipation of labor, endeavoring to free it from ignorance, vice, servitude, and poverty. He was a zealous champion of protection, and was always found in the front rank of social, industrial, and political reformers. He pub. in 1850 "Hints toward Reforms," including many of his lectures on temperance, labor, education, &c.; "Association Discussed," by Greeley and Raymond, 1847; "Art and Industry as represented in the Exhibition at the Crystal Palace," N.Y. 1853; "History of the Struggle for Slavery-Extension from 1787 to 1856;" "History of the American Conflict," 2 vols. 8vo, 1864–6; "Recollections of a Busy Life," 1868; "Overland Journey from N.Y. to San Francisco in 1859," 12mo, 1860; "Essays on Polit. Green, Martin E., brig.-gen. C.S.A., of Lewis Co., Mo.; killed at Vicksburg, Mpi., June 27, 1863. He was a class-leader in the Meth. Church. He organized a regt. near Paris, Mo., joined Price's army, and contrib. largely to the capture of Lexington, Mo., and the garrison under Col. Mulligan. His men rolled hemp-bales up the steep bank of the river, and converted them into movable breastworks. He was conspicuous in all Price's battles in Mo.; was in the battles of Farmington, Iuka, Corinth, Big Black, and Baker's Creek. At Vicksburg he had a presentiment he would be killed.

Greene, Nathanael, maj.-gen., one of the most disting. officers in the Revol. war, b. Warwick, R.I., May 27, 1742; d. June 19, 1786. Fourth in descent from one of the early settlers of N.E. He was educated a member of the Society of Friends, among whom his father was a preacher; received the mere rudiments of an English education, and was variously employed in the field, the mill, or at the anvil. He early manifested a love for books, and made himself master of Euclid. At the age of 20 he began to study law. He was the first to establish a public school in Coventry. Elected to the R.I. legisl. in 1770 and each succeeding year until he took com. of the Southern army, and a leading and popular member. On the approach of the Revol. he studied tactics; was dismissed from the Society of Friends, and became a member of the "Kentish Guards." After the battle of Lexington, the Colony of R.I. embodied 3 regts. of militia, which, as brig.-gen., he led to Cambridge, where their superiority of equipment and discipline made them conspicuous. Here he gained the confidence and friendship of Washington, which he retained through life. Made a brig.-gen. in the Continental army, June 22, 1775, and maj.-gen. Aug. 9, 1776. At Trenton he commanded the left wing, seized the artillery of the enemy, and cut off their retreat to Princeton; was at the battles of Brandywine (where, by a rapid march and successful stand, he preserved the army from utter destruction) and Germantown; and in March, 1778, accepted, though with great reluctance, the app. of quarterm.-gen., stipulating that he should not lose his right to command in action. Of this he availed himself at the battle of Monmouth and in the retreat from R.I. In Aug. 1780 he resigned the office, a poorer man than when he assumed it. June 23, 1780, he checked, with 2 brigades and a small body of militia, the advance of a corps of 5,000 of the enemy in the battle of Springfield. He was in com. of the army during Washington's visit to Hartford in Sept. 1780, and sat as pres. of the Court of Inquiry upon Maj. André App. to succeed Gates, Oct. 14, 1780, he found, on arriving at Charlotte Dec. 2, the Southern army a mere skeleton, without artillery, baggage, or stores. In his front was an enemy flushed with victory, and well provided; around him an exhausted country, whose inhabitants were divided into hostile parties. Adapting his operations to his means, he detached Morgan, who, after defeating Tarleton at the Cowpens, marched to rejoin Greene, and was pursued by Cornwallis, but without success. Foiled in the attempt, he vigoronsly pursued Greene, who was moving in a direction to unite with Morgan. It is this celebrated retreat from S.C. across N.C. into Va. which has won for the American commander a high rank in the estimation of military men. Assuming the offensive, Greene attacked Cornwallis at Guilford Court House, March 15, 1781. The British remained masters of the field, but lost 600 men, and were obliged to retire, leaving their wounded. Greene then marched into S.C., and, moving towards Camden, took post at Hobkirk's Hill, April 20. Here he was attacked on the morning of the 25th by Lord Rawdon, and, after a sanguinary conflict, was obliged to abandon the field. He next undertook, unsuccessfully, the siege of Ninety-Six, and then withdrew to the high hills of Santee to indulge his army in a short repose during the heat of the summer. Sept. 8 he fought the battle of Eutaw Springs, described by him as the most obstinate and bloody he had ever seen. In this battle, which prostrated their power in S.C., the British lost upwards of 1,000 men, and abandoned the entire State except Charleston and vicinity. When peace was restored, Greene returned to his native State. He everywhere met with enthusiasm and expressions of gratitude and admiration. On his arrival at Princeton, where the Congress was then in session, they presented him with two pieces of ordnance taken from the British army, "as a public testimony of the wisdom, fortitude, and military skill which disting. his com. in the Southern dept." They had previously voted him a British standard and a gold medal commemorative of the battle of Eutaw. The State of Ga. presented him with a fine plantation a few miles from Savannah, to which he removed with his family in the fall of 1785; and S. C. conveyed to him a valuable tract of land. A monument was voted by Congress, but was never erected. His son Nath. Ray, b. Morristown, N.J., Jan. 11, 1780, d. Greensdale, R.I., June 11, 1859. — See Life, Letters, and Papers of, by G. W. Greene, 3 vols. 8vo, 1867–71.

Greenough, Horatio, sculptor, b. Boston, Sept. 6, 1805; d. Somerville, Ms., Dec. 18, 1852. H.U. 1825. Son of a Boston merchant. His ideas of form were strongly marked in his youth; and he had a mechanical aptitude at imitating the objects which impressed themselves on his mind. At Harvard he became acquainted with Washington Allston and others, who encouraged him in his design of becoming an artist; and he went to Italy in the autumn of 1825. He returned to Boston in 1826, and, after modelling several busts, returned to Italy, fixing his residence in Florence. His industry was great; and the following comprise but a part of the works upon which his fame rests: a statue of "Abel," statue of Byron's "Medora," the "Chanting Cherubs," "Ascension of the Infant Spirit," "Genius of America," statue of "Washington upon the Public Grounds of the National Capitol," the "Angel Abdiel," two ideal busts of "Héloïse," ideal bust of the "Graces," bas relief of "Castor and Pollux," monument to "Guisti the Italian Poet," "The Genius of Love," ideal bust of "Lucifer," of our "Saviour Crucified," monument to Mr. and Mrs. Gibbs, portrait statue of Miss Grinnel, statuette of "Venus Victrix," and of "Venus contending for the Golden Apple." He also executed busts of John Adams, John Quincy Adams, Henry Clay, Josiah Quincy, Samuel Appleton, Jonathan Mason, Thomas Cole, John Jacob Astor, Judge Marshall, and many others. The original design for the Bunker's Hill Monument was by him. Congress appropriated $20,000 for the monument to Washington, much commended for its purity of taste, loftiness of conception, accuracy of anatomical study, and mechanical skill. The colossal group, "The Rescue," for the National Capitol, occupied the artist 8 years, and consists of four figures. He was a noble, kindly, and generous man. His Life and Essays were pub. in 1853 by H. T. Tuckerman. Richard S. Greenough, a younger brother, is a successful sculptor.

Greenup, Col. Christopher, gov. of Ky. (1804–8), b. Va. 1750; d. Frankfort, Ky., April 27, 1818. He served through the Revol. as a private and as an officer; at its close removed to Ky., where he was clerk of the Dist. Court; member of the legisl.; M.C. 1793–7; clerk of the State senate, and had the reputation of a sound lawyer.

Greenville, Sir Richard, navigator, b. Cornwall, Eng., 1540; d. 1591. In his youth he served in the imperial army against the Turks, and was knighted in 1571. Joining Raleigh, his relative, in his colonization schemes, he sailed in 1585 for America, with 7 vessels carrying 108 colonists. June 20 he made the mainland of Carolina; narrowly escaped wreck on the cape, to which, in consequence, he gave the name Cape Fear; explored the country for 8 days; and Aug. 23, after landing the colonists under Ralph Lane, sailed for Eng. The next year he recrossed the Atlantic with 3 ships laden with supplies, and found the colony broken up and the settlers gone, having been taken off by Sir Francis Drake. To keep possession of the country, he left 15 men on Roanoke Island; returned to Eng., and was made vice-admiral. In 1591, in conjunction with Lord Howard, he was commissioned to intercept a rich Spanish fleet. With only 5 ships, he attacked the enemy's fleet of 62 sail off the Azores. He sunk 4 of them, and killed 1,000 of the Spaniards; but, when his own ship was about to sink, he was carried on board the Spanish fleet, where he died, three days after, of his wounds.

Greenwood, Francis William Pitt, D.D., Unitarian clergyman and scholar, b. Boston, Feb. 5, 1797; d. Aug. 2, 1843. H.U. 1814. He studied theology under Dr. Ware; became, Oct. 21, 1818, pastor of the New South Church, Boston, withdrawing on account of ill health the next year; then resided a year in Europe, and, after his return in 1821, lived 2 years in Baltimore, where he edited the Unitarian Miscellany. His health being partial Guatimozin (gwä-te-mo'-zin), last king of Mexico; d. Feb. 15, 1525. Neph. of Montezuma, on the death of whose bro. Quetlevaca, in 1520, he was unanimously raised to the throne. He exerted himself with vigor in the defence of his capital, and repulsed an attempt by Cortes to take it by storm. Attempting to retreat across the lake, he was intercepted by the brigantines posted for that purpose, and made prisoner. When brought before Cortes, he conducted himself with the calm dignity of a prince who was conscious of having done all in his power to save his country, and was willing to fall along with it. Irritated by the smallness of the treasures found in the captured city, Cortes inhumanly ordered Guatimozin to be put to the torture in order to force a discovery of more. He, with his chief favorite, was stretched upon burning coals. He endured the pain in silence, and observing his companion to cast a piteous look, as if desirous to relieve himself by a disclosure, he darted an indignant glance upon him, exclaiming, "Do I lie upon a bed of flowers?" Ashamed of his cruelty, Cortes rescued the king, and remanded him to prison. Some time after, upon an insurrection of the Mexicans, the Spaniard, upon a bare suspicion that Guatimozin was concerned in the plot, caused him to be hanged without trial.

Guerard, BENJAMIN, gov. of S.C. 1783–5; speaker of the house, 1783; d. Charleston, S.C., Jan. 1789.

Guerrero (gĕr-rā'-ro), VICENTE, pres. of Mexico 1829; d. Feb. 14, 1831. By birth a Creole. At the commencement of the revol. he took arms against the royalists. From 1819 to 1828, Gen. Guerrero repeatedly became the rallying-point of the liberal or popular party, the Yorkinos, and was repeatedly called into active service in his military capacity. Having been successful in various contests, he at length in 1829 was elected to the presidency. The exped. of Barradas soon gave employment to the new govt., and, the better to enable the pres. to meet the exigency, he was invested with extraordinary powers; but after the victory over the Spanish troops, and when the invading expedition was destroyed, Guerrero evinced an unwillingness to relinquish the dictatorship, which became the pretext of another revol.; and Bustamente, the vice-pres., assumed the reins of government. Guerrero, having been deserted by his troops, resigned his office to Bustamente. In Sept. 1830, Guerrero collected a large force at Valladolid, and established a form of govt. in opposition to that of Bustamente; but he was soon after defeated by Gen. Bravo, taken, and shot at Cailapa.

Raleigh. After his return from Paris in 1589, where he had been five years chaplain to the English ambassador, and during which absence he had been nominated to a prebend in Bristol Cathedral, he was chosen by Raleigh a member of the corporation, to whom he assigned his patent for the prosecution of discoveries in Amer. In consequence of this, he prepared his grand work, "The Principal Navigations, Voyages, and Discoveries of the English Nation, made by Sea or Overland within the Compass of these 1500 Years." The first vol. in folio was pub. in 1589, the third and last in 1600. In 1605 Hakluyt was promoted to a prebend at Westminster, which, with the rectory of Wetheringset, Suffolk, was his only ecclesiastical preferment. He pub. several geographical works besides those above mentioned; among them "Virginia richly valued by the Description of Florida," London, 1609, 4to, which is both scarce and curious; a "Historie of the West Indies," translated from Peter Martyr; a translation of Leo's "Description of Africa," and Antonio Galvano's "History of Discoveries" from the Portuguese. The manuscript papers of Hakluyt were used by Purchas, another geographical collector. The name of this author has been perpetuated by a contemporary navigator, Henry Hudson, who gave the name of Hakluyt's headland to a promontory on the coast of Greenland in 1608. — Biog. Brit.

In the "Bibliographia" of Agassiz is a list of 73 memoirs, by Haldeman, of subjects in conchology, entomology, and paleontology, pub. in various scientific journals. His recent investigations have been into the philos. of language. They are embodied in an essay, "Analytic Orthography," which obtained in Eng. in 1858 the highest Trevellyan prize over 18 European competitors. His memoir on the relations of the Chinese and English languages appeared in the "Proceedings" of the Amer. Assoc. for the Advancement of Science in 1856. He has also pub. "Zoölogical Contributions," Phila. 1842–3; "Report on Linguistic Ethnology," 8vo, Camb. 1856.

Haldimand, Sir Frederick, K.B., a British gen., b. in canton of Neuchâtel, Oct. 1718; d. at Yverdun, Switzerland, June 5, 1791. He early entered the Prussian service, but in 1754, with his friend Bouquet, entered the British army; and he was app. lieut.-col. of the 60th Roy. Amer. Regt. Jan. 4, 1756, and came to Amer. in 1757. He disting. himself signally in the attack on Ticonderoga, July 8, 1758; and, by his defence of Oswego in 1759 against the attack of 4,000 French and Indians under La Corne, won high renown. He accomp. the army under Amherst from Oswego to Montreal in 1760; and in 1762 was promoted to be col. Employed in Fla. in 1767, immediately on his arrival at Pensacola he caused the fort to be considerably extended, widened the streets, and otherwise improved the place. May 25, 1772, he became maj.-gen. in America, and, in Oct. following, col. of the 60th Foot. He returned to England in Aug. 1775 for the purpose of giving information to the ministry on the state of the Colonies, and was commissioned a gen. in America, Jan. 1, 1776; in 1777 lieut.-gen. in the army, and lieut.-gov. of Quebec, where he succeeded Carleton as gov. in 1778, and administered its affairs in an oppressive and arbitrary manner until the close of 1784, when he returned to England.

Hale, Benjamin, D.D., educator, b. Newbury, Ms., Nov. 23, 1797; d. July 15, 1863. Bowd. Coll. 1818. On leaving college, he became principal of the Saco Acad.; then studied theology at Andover; was licensed to preach as a Congregationalist in Jan. 1822; became tutor in Bowd. Coll. in 1823, and principal of the Gardiner Lyceum 1822–7; prof of chemistry and mineralogy in Dartm. Coll. from 1827 to 1835; spent the winter of 1835–6 in St. Croix, W.I.; and was pres. of Geneva Coll., N.Y., from 1836 until from ill health compelled to resign, Jan. 19, 1858. While at Dartm. Hale, John Parker, senator, b. Rochester, N.H., 31 Mar. 1806. Bowd. Coll. 1827. Adm. to the bar in 1830; member of the N.H. legisl. 1832; dist. atty. for N. H. 1834–42; M.C. 1843–5; again member of the N.H. legisl., and speaker, 1846; U.S. senator (elected by a combination of Whigs and antislavery Democrats) 1847–53 and 1855–65; minister to Spain in 1865–9. In Congress Mr. Hale sided with the opponents of slavery. In a pub. letter in Jan. 1845, he strongly denounced, on antislavery grounds, the annexation of Texas, and was declared a traitor to the Democratic party. This defiance of party dictation gave him a strong hold on the favor of the people. On taking his seat in the U.S. senate he was almost the only man elected on antislavery grounds, and disconnected with either of the great parties. He stood almost alone on the slavery question; was a ready speaker, and by his wit and humor often succeeded in turning aside the attacks of proslavery senators, and in mitigating party animosity. Counsel for the defendants in the important trials growing out of the rescue of the slave Shadrach at Boston in 1851. Candidate of the Liberty party for the presidency in 1852, and received 157,680 votes. On leaving the senate in 1853, he established himself in New York; d. Dover, N. H., Nov. 19, 1873.

Hale, Nathan, capt. Revol. army, b. Coventry, Ct., June 6, 1755; executed as a spy in New York, Sept. 22, 1776. Y. C. 1773. He engaged in teaching, first at E. Haddam, and afterward at N. London, but, soon after the Lexington alarm, entered the army as a lieut., and became a capt. in Knowlton's regt. While with the troops near Boston, he was vigilant and faithful in every point of duty. In Sept. 1776, when in New York, he, with an associate, planned and effected the capture of a British sloop laden with provisions, taking her at midnight from under the guns of a frigate. After the retreat from Long Island, Washington applied to Knowlton to furnish him with information of the strength, situation, and future movements, of the enemy. Capt. Hale offered himself a vol. for this hazardous service, passed in disguise to L.I., examined every part of the British army, and obtained the best possible information respecting its situation and future operations. While on his return, he was apprehended, carried before Sir Wm. Howe, and ordered for execution the next morning. This order was carried out in the most unfeeling manner. He was denied the attendance of a clergyman; was not permitted the use of a Bible; and his letters to his mother and other friends, written on the morning of his execution, were destroyed by the provost-marshal, "that the rebels should not know they had a man in their army who could die with so much firmness." His dying observation was, that "he only lamented that he had but one life to lose for his country." Dwight has celebrated his virtues both in prose and verse. — See Stuart, Life of Nathan Hale, 1856.

Hale, Nathan, LL.D. (H.U. 1853), journalist, nephew of the preceding, son of Rev. Enoch, b. Westhampton, Ms., Aug. 16, 1784; d. Brookline, Ms., Feb. 9, 1863. Wms. Coll. 1804. He studied law; served two years as instructor in Exeter Acad., then removed to Boston; was adm. to the bar in 1810, and practised law 4 years. He then, with Henry D. Sedgwick, edited the Weekly Messenger, devoted to politics and literature. March 1, 1814, he purchased the Boston Daily Advertiser, the first daily in N. England, and for many years the only one, and established the principle of editorial responsibility distinct from that of individual contributors. Its influence was great, at first as a Whig print, and latterly as a Republican organ. Its influence was given in 1820 against the Mo. bill, and in 1854 to oppose the Nebraska bill. It was the first journal to suggest the immediate free colonization of Kansas. In 1825 he pub. a map of N. E., which is still a standard authority. In 1828 he pub. a work on the protective policy. He was an early advocate of railroads in N.E.; and in 1828 was the acting chairman of the Ms. Board of Internal Improvements. First pres. of the Boston and Worcester R. R. Co., and continued 19 years. In 1846 he was app. chairman of the commiss.

He advocated the encouragement of domestic manufactures by a protective tariff. Having restored public credit, and witnessed the revival of trade and industry, he resigned 31 Jan. 1795, and resumed practice at the bar. He advocated strict neutrality in the French revol. struggle in his papers signed "Pacificus," and, under the signature of "Camillus," powerfully supported Jay's treaty. He assisted Washington in the preparation of his "Farewell Address." He declined the position of chief justice of the U.S. In 1798, the French Directory having provoked the American people by acts of hostility, the army was re-organized, Washington taking the chief command, and Hamilton second as inspec.-gen., with the rank of maj.-gen. On the death of Washington in Dec. 1799, Hamilton succeeded him as com-in-chief; but the army was soon disbanded. When the house of representatives were to decide between Jefferson and Burr, which should be pres., he advised his friends to prefer the former. Burr being in 1804 a candidate for gov. of N.Y., Hamilton opposed his election, expressing his opinion that Burr was a dangerous man, and unfit to be trusted with power. Defeated in his ambitious projects, Burr challenged Hamilton, who, though utterly condemning the practice of duelling, accepted the challenge, was mortally wounded at Hoboken, 11 July, 1804, and died the next day. His death was deeply and generally lamented. His widow Elizabeth, b. 9 Aug. 1757, d. Washington, D.C., 9 Nov. 1854. His youngest son, Col. Wm. Steven, U.S. surveyor of public lands in Ill., subsequently engaged in mining in Cal., d. Sacramento, Cal., 7 Aug. 1850, a. 50. Hamilton, Gen. James, politician, b. Charleston, S.C., May 8, 1786; d. Nov. 15, 1857, by a steamboat collision, near the coast of Texas. His father, Maj. James, a favorite aide of Washington, d. Nov. 26, 1833, a. 82. Liberally educated, he adopted the law as a profession; served in the war of 1812 on the Canadian frontier as a maj., and practised law in Charleston, where he was some years mayor. By his vigilance the formidable negro conspiracy in 1822, led by Denmark Vesey, was detected. Often a member of the State legisl., and M.C. 1822–9, and the ultra advocate of free-trade and Southern rights, and of direct taxation. An active partisan of Gen. Jackson, who in 1828 offered him the post of sec. of war, and minister to Mexico, both of which he declined. He urged armed resistance to the tariff act of 1828, and, while gov. of S.C. (1830–2), recommended to the legisl. the passage of the nullification act, which placed the State in collision with the Federal Govt.; app. by Gov. Hayne his successor, com. of the State troops. He took an active part in the affairs of Texas; procured the recognition of her independence from Eng. and France in 1841; subsequently aided in procuring her admission into the Union, and at the time of his death was U.S. senator elect. With his usual courtesy and generosity, he yielded his own chance of safety to a lady among the passengers, to whom he was an entire stranger. He was one of the founders of the Southern Quarterly Review and of the Bank of Charleston, and took an active part in railroad enterprise and in the extension and elevation of Southern commerce.

Hamilton, James, artist, b. Ireland 1820; came to the U.S. in infancy; established himself as a marine painter in Phila., and excelled in sea-fights. He is well known as a spirited illustrator of Dr. Kane's Arctic Expeditions. He was in 1573 treas. of the navy, which he held till his death; and in 1588 vice-adm. of the squad. sent against the Spanish Armada, and was knighted for his conduct on that occasion. In 1595 he was sent with his kinsman, Drake, against the Spanish W. Indian settlements; but difference of opinion and consequent ill success occasioned him so much chagrin, that it is supposed to have hastened his death. Author of a "True Declaration of the Troublesome Voyage of Mr. John Hawkins to the Partes of Guynea and the W. Indies, 1567–8," Lond. 8vo, 1569. His son, Sir Richard Hawkins, was adm. of N. Eng.

Hawkins, JOHN H. W., temperance reformer, b. Baltimore, 1797; d. Parkersburg, Pa., Aug. 26, 1858. He became a confirmed drunkard, sinking to the lowest depths of intoxication, but, through the interposition of his little dau., was restored to himself, to his family, and to usefulness. This was in June, 1840; and from that time he labored and lectured in every State in the Union, save California, with wonderful success. — See Life, by Wm. Geo. Hawkins, 12mo, 1859.

Hawkins, COL. PHILEMON, Revol. statesman, b. N.C. Dec. 3, 1752; d. Pleasant Hill, Warren Co., N.C., Jan. 28, 1833. Member of a troop of cav. at the battle of Allamance, May 16, 1771. Before he was of age, he was a member of the Gen. Assembly for Bute Co. He represented the counties of Bute and Granville 13 years, with but two years' intermission. His last term was at Fayetteville in 1789. He raised the first vol. co. in the county of Bute for the War of Independence. In 1776 he was elected col. of a regt.; and in that com. performed many services. He was the last surviving signer of the State constitution of N.C.; in 1776 was a member of the convention which ratified the U.S. Constitution; and frequently a member of the Exec. Council. — *N.E. Hawley, GIDEON, missionary to the Indians, b. Bridgeport, Ct., Nov. 5, 1727; d. Marshpee, Oct. 3, 1807. Y.C. 1749. Ord. July 31, 1754. He began his mission at Stockbridge in Feb. 1752, and opened a school for Indian children. His next field of usefulness was Oughquauga on the Susquehanna, whither he went in June, 1753, remaining until the French war began in May, 1756; when he went to Boston, and was chaplain in Gridley's regt. in the exped. against Crown Point. From Apr. 10, 1758, to his d., he labored in the Marshpee Mission. He was well qualified for his work; the dignity of his manner, and a voice of authority, giving him great influence with the Indians. He pub. in Hist. Colls. of Ms. Biog. and Topog. Anecdotes respecting Sandwich and Marshpee, and an interesting letter narrating his journey to Oughquauga.

Hawley, GIDEON, scholar, b. Huntington, Ct., 1785; d. Albany, 20 Aug. 1870. Un. Coll. 1809. Removed to Saratoga Co., N.Y., 1794. Adm. to the Albany bar in 1813; sec. of the regents of the U. 1814–41; and a regent of the Smithsonian Inst. 1846–70. Thoroughly versed in literature and science. He printed for private distribution among his friends "Essays in Truth and Knowledge."

Hawley, MAJOR JOSEPH, an eminent statesman, b. Northampton, Ms., Oct. 8, 1723; d. March 10, 1788. Y.C. 1742. He began public life as a preacher, but devoted himself to the law, and practised in Hampshire Co. many years with great reputation. Disting. for his legal attainments and political knowledge, as well as for integrity. He was regarded as one of the ablest advocates of American liberty. Repeatedly elected to the council, he steadily refused the office, preferring a seat in the H. of representatives, where, from 1764 to 1776, his patriotism and his bold and manly eloquence gave him a commanding position. He was a member of all the important committees of the time; was often chairman, sometimes preparing the resolves offered; and in 1770 was one of the com. of corresp. He was chairman of the com. of the Prov. Congress in Oct. 1774 to consider the state of the country, &c.; and was also a member of that body in 1775. He continued in the Gen. Court till infirm health necessitated his retirement. From a violent opposer of the ecclesiastical measures of Jonathan Edwards, whose removal from Northampton he had been active in effecting, he became his warm advocate; and in 1760 wrote a remarkable letter deploring his part in the affair.

Hawley, JOSEPH ROSWELL, journalist and politician, b. Richmond Co., N.C., 31 Oct. 1826. Ham. Coll. 1847. At the age of 11 he went to Ct.; established himself at Hartford in the practice of law in 1850; and in 1857 connected himself with the Evening Press, a Repub. organ. Entering the 1st Ct. regt. in Apr. 1861, he was a capt. at Bull Run; lieut.-col. 7th Ct. regt. Sept. 1861, comg. after the promo. of Col. Terry; at siege of Pulaski, Poccataligo; siege of Forts Wagner and Sumter; com. a brigade at Olustee, Fla., in Feb. 1864, and Army of the James in Va.; at siege of Petersburg, Drury's Bluff, Deep Bottom, Deep Run, and Darbytown Road; brig.-gen. 17 Sept. 1864; com. 2d brig. Terry's div. 10th corps; afterward Terry's chief of staff in Va.; brev. maj.-gen. Sept. 1865; gov. of Ct. 1866–7; pres. Chicago Nat. Repub. Conv. June, 1868. Now (1871) edits Hartford Courant.

Hawthorne, NATHANIEL, author, b. July 4, 1804, at Salem, where his English ancestors settled early in the 17th century; d. Plymouth, N. H., May 19, 1864. Bowd. Coll. 1825. Feeble in health, he lived on a farm from his 10th year. After quitting coll., he resided many years in Salem. In 1832 he pub. in Boston an anonymous romance. In 1837 he coll. a number of his tales and sketches, and pub. them under the title of "Twice-told Tales," of which a second series appeared in 1842. From 1838 until 1841 he was a weigher and gauger in the Boston Custom House. He afterward lived with the association at Brook Farm in West Roxbury, Ms., — a community of literati and philosophers, who supported the freedom of a rural life by the independent labor of their hands, — of which he was one of the founders. Before the expiration of a year, he returned to Boston, where he resided till 1843, when he m., and took up his abode in the old manse at Concord, which adjoins the first battle-field of the Revol. In the Introd. to the "Mosses from an Old Manse," 1846, he has given an account of his life there. From 1846 to 1850 he was surveyor of the port of Salem. Of this decayed old custom-house and its venerable inmates he gave a graphic and satirical sketch in the Introd. to "The Scarlet Letter," 1850, a powerful romance of early New-England life, which greatly enhanced his reputation. He then settled in Lenox, and wrote "The House of the Seven Gables," 1851. This was followed in 1852 by "The Blithedale Romance," in which, as he says, he has ventured to make free with his old and affectionationately-remembered home at Brook Farm, as being certainly the most romantic episode of his own life. In 1852 he removed from Lenox to Concord. Having, during the presidential canvass of 1852, pub. a Life of his coll. friend Franklin Pierce, the latter in 1853 app. him to one of the most lucrative posts in his gift, — the U.S. consulate at Liverpool. This he resigned in 1857, and travelled in Europe two years. His other writings are, "True Stories from History and Biography," 1851; "The Wonder-Book for Girls and Boys," 1851; "The Snow Image and other Twice-told Tales," 1852; and "Tanglewood Tales," 1853. In 1845 he edited "The Journal of an African Cruiser," from the MSS. of Lieut. Horatio Bridge. In 1860 he pub. "The Marble Faun." His last work, "Our Old Home," 1863, was a collection of sketches of English scenery and life, first pub. in the Atlantic Monthly. Since his death, "Passages from his Amer. and English Note-Books" have been pub. in 4 vols., and a complete edition of his works in 18 vols., by Ticknor & Fields, Boston.

U.S. atty., in which capacity he was the prosecutor of Aaron Burr, and afterward judge of the U.S. Court for the Eastern Dist. of Va. His wife was the dau. of Pres. Monroe. His political writings, signed "Hortensius," gave him some celebrity. He wrote a treatise against the Usury Laws, "Life of John Thompson," and a treatise on Emigration, 1814.

Hay, JOHN, poet and journalist, b. Salem, Ind., 8 Oct. 1839. B. U. 1858. Son of Dr. Charles, who comes of a family of Ky. pioneers, and of Helen Leonard of Bristol, R.I. Studied law in Springfield, Ill., with Logan & Hay; immediately on being adm. to the bar, accomp. Pres. Lincoln to Washington (1861), remaining with him almost constantly until his d., first as assist. sec., and afterwards as adj. and aide-de-camp; served some months under Gens. Hunter and Gillmore, attaining the rank of col. and assist. adj.-gen.; sec. of legation at Paris 1865–7; chargé d'affaires at Vienna 1867–8; sec. of legation at Madrid 1869–70; and since Nov. 1870 has been assoc. editorially with the N.Y. Tribune. His parents have resided in Warsaw, Ill., since 1841. Three bros. and two bros.-in-law were officers in the war for the Union. He has pub. (J. R. Osgood & Co.) "Pike County Ballads," and "Castilian Days," studies of Spanish life and character.

Hayes, AUGUSTUS ALLEN, M.D., chemist, b. Windsor, Vt., Feb. 28, 1806. Milit. Acad., Norwich, Vt., 1823. He studied chemistry under Dr. J. F. Dana. In 1825 he discovered the organic alkaloid sanguinaria, remarkable for the brilliant colors of its salts. In 1827, while assist. prof. of chemistry in the N.H. Med. Coll., he investigated the compounds of chromium; and his paper on this subject, repub. in Europe in 1828, attracted much attention. Since 1828 Dr. Hayes has resided in Boston and vicinity, sustaining successively the posts of director of an extensive manuf. of colors and chemical products at Roxbury, Ms.; of consulting chemist or director of some of the most important dyeing, bleaching, gas, iron and copper smelting establishments in N. England; and State assayer of Ms. In 1837 his investigations upon the economical generation of steam, and the relative value of fuels, led in 1838 to a new arrangement of steam boilers, now in general use. He has also made important improvements in refining iron and copper. Among his important researches are those in relation to the chemical decomposition of alcohol, upon the action of alcohol upon the human system, and a memoir on the chemical action of sea-waters, undertaken under a commission from the navy dept. to examine and report on the subject of copper and copper sheathing as applied in the construction of national vessels. He has contrib. to the Proceedings of several scientific bodies, the Journal of Science, and the Annual of Scientific Discovery.

Hayes, ISAAC I., explorer, b. Chester Co., Pa., 1832. M.D. (U. of Pa) 1853. In this year he accomp. Dr. Kane's exped., which, after great suffering, returned in the fall of 1855. His "Arctic Boat Journey" (Boston, 1860) narrates this exped. In 1860 he led a second exped. to the arctic regions, and returned in the autumn of 1861. His story,

Hayne, PAUL H., poet, nephew of Gov. R. Y. Hayne, b. Charleston, S.C., Jan 1, 1831. Son of Lieut. H. of the navy. He was educated in Charleston, and has been a frequent contributor to the South. Lit. Messenger and other periodicals. He was editor of the Charleston Lit. Gazette, was connected with the Evening News, and, since the beginning of 1857, principal editor of Russell's Magazine. A vol. of his poems was issued in Boston in 1854, a 2d in N.Y. 1857, and a 3d, entitled "Avolio and other Poems," in Dec. 1859. His longest poem is entitled "The Temptation of Venus, a Monkish Legend."

Hayne, ROBERT YOUNG, statesman, b. near Charleston, Nov. 10, 1791; d. Asheville, N.C., Sept. 24, 1839. Grand-nephew of Col. Isaac Hayne. With but a limited education, at the age of 17 he entered the law-office of Langdon Cheves, and was adm. to the bar in 1812. Upon the election of Mr. Cheves to Congress, he succeeded to his large practice. He was in Oct. 1814 chosen a member of the legisl., where he disting. himself as an able debater; became speaker in 1818, and, a few months later, atty.-gen. of S.C.; U.S. senator in 1823–32, disting. himself by his speeches on numerous occasions, particularly in the tariff discussions, as the uncompromising opponent of the protective system; and, as chairman of the com. on naval affairs, displayed administrative abilities of a high order. In a powerful speech on the tariff in 1824, he first took the ground that Congress had not the constitutional right to impose duties on imports for the purpose of protecting domestic manufactures. In a speech on Mr. Clay's resolution, he was the first to declare and defend in Congress the right of a State under the federal compact to arrest the operation of a law which she considered unconstitutional. This doctrine led to the celebrated debate between Mr. Webster and himself, in which the eloquence and argumentative powers of both statesmen were displayed to their fullest extent. His course in the senate rendered him exceedingly popular at home; and he was a member of the convention convoked by the legisl. (Nov. 24, 1832) for the purpose of reviewing the obnoxious tariff acts of Congress. The celebrated ordinance of nullification, the result of their labors, was reported to that body by Mr. Hayne as chairman of the com. to which the subject had been referred. In Dec. he was elected gov. of the State, and resigned his seat in the senate. Pres. Jackson issued a proclamation, denouncing these proceedings of S.C.: but Gov. Hayne stood firm; and S.C. prepared for armed resistance. The threatened danger was arrested by the passage in Congress of a compromise act. In 1834 he was elected mayor of Charleston; in 1837 pres. of the Charleston, Louisville, and Cincinnati Railroad Co. Besides his able and eloquent speeches in the senate, he was the author of the papers in the old Southern Review on improvement of the navy, and the vindication of his relative, Col. Hayne. — See Life and Speeches of R. Y. Hayne, 1845.

Haynes, JOHN, statesman, b. Copford Hall, Essex, Eng.; d. Mar. 1, 1654. He arrived, 3 Sept., 1633, in Boston with Rev. Mr Hooker; was in 1634 and 1636 an assist., and in 1635 gov. of Ms. In 1637 he was prominent among the founders of Ct.; was chosen its first gov. in 1639, and every alternate year afterward till his death. He was one of the five who in 1638 drew up a written constitution for the Colony, the first ever formed in Amer., and which embodies the main points of all our subsequent State constitutions and of the Federal Constitution. Bancroft speaks of him as a man "of large estate, and larger affections; of heavenly mind, and spotless life; of rare sagacity, and accurate but unassuming judgment; by nature tolerant, and a friend to freedom; an able legislator; and dear to the people by his benevolent virtues and his disinterested conduct." Few, if any, did as much as he for the true interests of the Colony of Ct. He was one of the best educated of the early settlers of this country. His son JOSEPH was the minister of the First Church in Hartford from 1664 to his d., May 24, 1679, a. 38. H.U. 1658.

Haynes, LEMUEL, a colored preacher, b. W. Hartford, Ct., July 18, 1753; d. Granville, N.Y., 28 Sept. 1833. His father was black, and his mother was white. He was well treated, and carefully instructed by his master in religion; was a faithful servant; and superintended most of his master's business. In 1774 he enlisted as a minute-man; in 1775 joined the army at Roxbury; in 1776 was a vol. in the exped. to Ticonderoga, after which he returned to Granville, where he labored on a farm. Evening after evening he plied his studies by firelight, having laid in a store of pine-knots for that purpose. In 1780 he was licensed, and preached 5 years in Granville; was ord. in 1785; preached 2 years in Torringford; was then called to a parish in Rutland, where he continued 30 years; and afterward labored in Manchester and in Granville, N.Y., from 1822 till his death. A Memoir of him has been published by Rev. Dr. Cooley.

La Salle's exped., constructing at Niagara a vessel for navigating the Lakes above the falls. Aug. 7, 1679, they began their voyage, and, reaching the Illinois River, built Fort Creve-Cœur, near the present site of Peoria. 29 Feb. 1680, he proceeded in a canoe to the Upper Mpi. as far as the falls, which he named Saint Anthony's, and which no European had yet seen. Arriving at the mouth of the St. Francis River, in what is now Minnesota, he named it for the founder of his order; travelled about 180 miles along its banks; visited the Sioux Indians; and meeting a party of Frenchmen, who had come by way of Lake Superior, returned with them to Canada. Returning to Europe, he pub. at Paris, in 1683–4, an account of his travels, entitled "A Description of Louisiana," — a work of great value, notwithstanding the vanity, and proneness to exaggeration, of its author. In 1697 he pub. his "New Discovery of a Vast Country situated in America," containing the matter in his History, with the addition of an account of his voyage down the Lower Mpi., which, according to Jared Sparks, is a fabrication copied from Le Clerq's "Narrative." Hennepin's descriptions of Indian life are generally accurate; and he was a courageous and daring explorer. Though he

Henry, JOSEPH, LL.D. (H. U. 1851), physicist, b. Albany, N.Y., Dec. 17, 1797. He received a common-school education, and for some years was a watchmaker. In 1826 he was app. prof. of mathematics in the Albany Acad.; in 1827 he began a series of experiments in electricity; and in 1828 pub. an account of various modifications of electro-magnetic apparatus. He was the first to prove by actual experiment, that, in order to develop magnetic power at a distance, a galvanic battery of intensity must be employed to project the current; and that a magnet surrounded by many turns of one long wire must be used to receive this current. In 1831, in some experiments at the Albany Acad., he transmitted signals by means of the electro-magnet through a wire more than a mile in length. An account of these experiments, and of his electro-magnetic machine, was pub. in Silliman's Am. Journal of Science in 1831, in which he pointed out the applicability of the facts demonstrated by his experiments to the instantaneous conveyance of intelligence between distant points by means of a magnetic-telegraph, which was several years subsequently brought into practical operation by Prof. Morse. In 1832 he was called to the chair of natural philos. in N.J. Coll.; in Feb. 1837 he went to Europe, visiting Prof. Wheatstone of King's Coll., London, to whom he explained his discoveries, and his method of producing great mechanical effects at a distance — such as the ringing of church-bells 100 miles off — by means of the electro-magnet. In 1846, on the organization of the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, Prof. Henry was app. sec., a post he still holds, and which gives him its principal direction. He has pub. "Contributions to Electricity and Magnetism," 1839; and many scientific papers in the Philos. Transactions, Silliman's Journal, and the Journal of the Franklin Institute. — d. May, 1878.

Henry, PATRICK, orator and statesman, b. Studley, Hanover Co., Va., May 29, 1736; d. June 6, 1799. His father, Col. John Henry, a native of Aberdeen, was county surveyor, presiding magistrate, and a man of liberal education. At the age of 10 his father took him from school, and taught him at home, where he had opened a grammar school. He acquired some proficiency in mathematics; but his taste for hunting and fishing predominated. The embarrassed circumstances of his father led him to embark at the age of 15 in mercantile business, in which he was unsuccessful. He m. Miss Shelton when he was 18; and at the age of 24, after 6 weeks' study of the law, was adm. to practice. For a long time he had no practice, and was extremely poor, living with his father-in-law, a tavern-keeper, and assisting him in his business. At the age of 27 he was retained in the celebrated "Parsons Cause," and at once became famous as an orator. Removing to Louisa Co. in 1764, he became a member of the house of burgesses, May 1765. Into this assembly, violently hostile to extreme measures, he introduced those memorable resolutions against the Stamp Act, one of which declared that that body had the exclusive right and power to levy taxes and impositions upon the inhabitants of the Colony. In the stormy debate which ensued, Henry vehemently exclaimed, "Tarquin and Cæsar had each his Brutus; Charles the First, his Cromwell; and George the Third" — "Treason!" cried the speaker; the cry was echoed from every part of the house — "may profit by their example! If this be treason, make the most of it!" The resolutions were carried, — the last by a majority of one. In 1769 he was adm. to the bar of the Gen. Court, where, in jury-trials, in which his wonderful powers of oratory could be brought to bear, he far exceeded all his contemporaries. Early in the session of 1773, Henry, the Lees, Jefferson, and Dabney Carr, originated the "Committee of Corresp. for the Dissemination of Intelligence between the Colonies." In Sept. 1774 Henry was a delegate to the Gen. Congress at Phila., where he was the first speaker. His extraordinary eloquence astonished all listeners; and he took rank as the greatest orator of America. In March, 1775, at the Second State Convention, he moved the organization of the militia, and that the "Colony be immediately put in a state of defence." Lord Dunmore having clandestinely removed on the night of April 20 all the powder of the Colony, Henry, placing himself at the head of the militia of Hanover, marched upon Williamsburg, and obliged the agent of Dunmore to pay for it. In June, Henry was elected col. of the 1st Va. regt., but shortly after resigned. A delegate to the convention of May, 1776; he was the first Republican gov. of the State, serving from 1776 to 1779. Returning to the legisl., where he served to the end of the war, he was again gov. until the autumn of 1786. In 1788 he was a member of the convention which ratified the Federal Constitution, which he opposed with all his eloquence and strength. He feared that the final result would be the destruction of the rights of the sovereign States. In 1794 he retired from the bar, and removed to his estate of Red Hill in Charlotte. App. by Washington in 1795 sec. of state, he declined the office, as he afterward did that of envoy to France, offered by Adams, and that

Hooper, WILLIAM, Revol. statesman, b. Boston, June 17, 1742; d. Hillsborough, N.C., Oct. 1790. H.U. 1760. William his father (min. of the West Cong. Ch., Boston, 18 May, 1737–19 Nov. 1746; of Trinity Ch. (Epis.), 28 Aug. 1747, to his d. 14 Apr. 1767), b. and educ. in Scotland, author of "The Apostles neither Impostors nor Enthusiasts," 1742. The son studied law under James Otis, and, on being adm. to the bar, went to N.C. in 1764, and removed permanently to Wilmington in 1767, where he soon obtained extensive practice, and was noted for his social qualities and hospitality. He represented Wilmington in the legisl. of 1773, and signalized himself by his opposition to the arbitrary measures of the govt., against which he also wielded a successful pen under the signature of "Hampden." In 1774 he was a delegate to the Gen. Congress at Phila.; chairman of a com. app. to report an address to the inhabitants of Jamaica, the draught of which was his work. Soon after signing the Decl. of Indep., Mr. Hooper was obliged to resign his seat on account of the embarrassed condition of his private affairs. He filled various public stations in his adopted State until 1787.

Hope, HENRY, an eminent banker of Amsterdam, b. Boston, 1736; d. Lond. Feb. 25, 1811. He was the son of a Scottish loyalist who had settled in Boston. Henry lived some time at Quincy. At the age of 18 he went to Eng.; soon after entered a London countinghouse; and in 1760 became a partner with his uncles in Amsterdam. On the death of his uncle Adrian in 1780, the whole business devolved on him.

Hopkins, DANIEL, D.D. (Dartm. Coll. 1809), minister of Salem, Ms., from Nov. 1778 to his d. Dec. 14, 1814; b. Waterbury, Ct., Oct. 16, 1734. Y.C. 1758. Bro. of Dr. Samuel of Newport. He taught school at Salem in 1766–78. He pub. dedication sermon, 1805; and a sermon on the death of Washington. A vol. of his works, with Memoir by Prof. Park, was pub. 1853. — Sprague's Annals.

Hopkins, EDWARD, gov. of Ct., b. Shrewsbury, Eng., 1600; d. Lond. Mar. 1657. He was an eminent merchant in Lond., and came to Boston with Mr. Davenport in the summer of 1637. Removing to Hartford, he was chosen a magistrate in 1639, and gov. of Ct. from 1640 to 1654 alternately with Mr. Haynes. Upon the death of his elder bro. he returned to Eng.; became warden of the fleet, commissioner of the admiralty, and member of parliament; not forgetting, however, his friends in N.E., who derived great benefit from his services in the mother-country. At his death, he left a large estate in N.E., which has been appropriated to the support of the grammar-schools in N. Haven, Hartford, and Hadley. He was one of those who formed the union of the N.E. Colonies, 1643. He left a donation of £500, which was, by a decree of chancery, 1710, paid to Harv. Coll. With this money, real estate was purchased in a township named Hopkinton in honor of the donor. — Eliot.

Hopkins, ESEK, first commodore of the Amer. navy, b. Scituate, R.I., 1718; d. North Providence, Feb. 26, 1802. On the breaking-out of the Revol. war, he was commissioned by Gov. Cooke as brig.-gen. Dec. 22, 1775, he received a commission from Congress as commo. and com.-in.-chief of the navy. He put to sea in Feb. 1776, with the first squad.

sent out by the Colonies, consisting of 4 ships and 3 sloops. The fleet sailed for the Bahamas, capturing the forts at New Providence, 80 cannon, and a large quantity of ordnance, stores, and ammunition. On his return, off Block Island he took the British schooner "Hawke," and the bomb-brig "Bolton," for which the pres. of Congress complimented him officially. Two days afterwards, with 3 vessels, he attacked "The Glasgow" of 29 guns; but she escaped, and for this Hopkins and Capt. Whipple were censured, the latter particularly. In June, 1776, Hopkins was ordered by Congress to appear before the naval committee in Phila. to reply to charges preferred against him for not annoying the enemy's ships on the southern coast. He was defended by John Adams, and was acquitted, partly out of regard for the feelings of his bro. Stephen, a member of Congress, but was dismissed the service 2 Jan. 1777. Bancroft styles him "aged and incompetent." Often a member of the R.I. Assembly. His son, JOHN BURROWS, was active in the destruction of "The Gaspee;" was one of the first capts. of the Revol. navy, commis. Dec. 22, 1775; com. "The Cabot" (16 guns) in the exped. to the Bahamas, Feb. 1776; and in April, 1779, sailed from Boston in com. of a squad., which returned safely after a number of valuable captures.

Hopkins, JOHN HENRY, D.C.L., LL.D., Pr.-Ep. bishop of Vt., b. Dublin, Jan. 30, 1792; d. Rock Point, Vt., Jan. 9, 1868. He came to Amer. with his parents in Aug. 1800, and was intended for the law; but, after receiving a classical education, spent a year in a counting-house in Phila.; assisted Wilson the ornithologist to prepare the plates to the first 4 vols. of his work; and ab. 1810 embarked in the manuf. of iron in the western part of Pa. In Oct. 1817 he quitted the business a bankrupt; was, after 6 months' study, adm. to the bar in Pittsburg, but in Nov. 1823 entered the ministry. Ord. priest in May, 1824, and rector of Trinity Church, Pittsburg. A new building being wanted, he became its architect, studying Gothic architecture for the purpose. In 1831 he accepted a call to Trinity Church, Boston, as assist. minister. A theol. sem. was at the same time established in the diocese of Ms., in which he became prof. of systematic divinity. Consec. 1st bishop of Vt. Oct. 31, 1832. He at the same time accepted the rectorship of St. Paul's, Burlington. He soon began a boys' school, which involved him, pecuniarily, to a degree which resulted in the sacrifice of his property, and a debt which it took him many years to cancel. He resigned his rectorship in 1856, that he might devote himself more unreservedly to the work of his diocese, and the building-up at Burlington of the "Vt. Epis. Institute." Besides a number of pamphlets, sermons, and addresses, he has pub. "Christianity Vindicated," 1833; "The Primitive Creed Examined and Explained," 1834; "The Primitive Church compared with the Prot.-Epis. Church of the Present Day," 1835; "Essay on Gothic Architecture," 1836; "The Church of Rome in her Primitive Purity compared with the Church of Rome at the Present Day," 1837; "Twelve Canzonets," words and music, 1839; "Causes, Principles, and Results of the British Reformation," 1844; "History of the Confessional," 1850; "A Refutation of Milner's End of Controversy," 1854; "The Amer. Citizen, his Rights and Duties," 1857; "Vindication of Slavery," 1863; "Church History in Verse," 1867. He took a prominent part in the Pan-Anglican synod at Lambeth, and received from Oxford U. the degree of D.C.L. He was a decided champion of the High-Church party.

Hopkins, LEMUEL, physician and poet, b. Waterbury, Ct., June 19, 1750; d. Hartford, Apr. 14, 1801. A.M. of Y.C. 1784. He practised medicine at Litchfield from 1776 to 1784, when he removed to Hartford, where he sustained a high reputation, and had an extensive practice. He was peculiar and original in his appearance, manners, and opinions; bold in his inquiries; free from the restraints of prejudice or authority; and severe and sarcastic in his wit. He was benevolent and philanthropic; was talented, learned, and poetical; in his earlier days an adherent of the French infidel philosophy, but, later, a diligent student of the Bible. With Trumbull, Barlow, Alsop, Theodore Dwight, and others (called "The Hartford Wits"), he joined in the "Anarchiad" (which he projected, and had a principal share in writing, having for its object the support of an efficient Federal Constitution, a subject then greatly exercising the public mind), "The Echo," "Political Greenhouse," "The Guillotine," and similar satirical compositions; and he is said to have written for Barlow the beautiful and well-known version of the 137th psalm, beginning, "Along the banks where Babel's current flows." Among the best known of his verses are the "Hypocrite's Hope," and an Elegy on the "Victim of a Cancer Quack." Some of his verses appear in the Litchfield Coll. of "American Poems," 1793.

Hopkins, MARK, D.D. (Dartm. Coll. 1837), LL.D. (U. of N.Y. 1857), clergyman and author, b. Stockbridge, Ms., Feb. 4, 1802. Wms. Coll. 1824. Grandson of Mark, an officer of the Revol., and subsequently a lawyer. He was a tutor two years; received in 1828 the degree of M.D., and in 1829 commenced the practice of medicine in N.Y. In Aug. 1830 he was called to the chair of moral philosophy and rhetoric; and Sept. 15, 1836–72, was pres. of Wms. Coll. Now (1875) prof. of men. and mor. philos. He is also pastor of the Coll. Church; and has lectured before the Lowell Inst. of Boston, the Smithsonian Inst., and various literary and scientific associations. He has taken an active part in the deliberations of the A.B.C.F.M., of which, since 1857, he has been pres. Author of "Lectures on the Evidences of Christianity," 8vo, 1846; a new edition 1864; also a series of "Lectures on Moral Science;" "Law of Love," &c., 1869; "Miscellaneous Essays and Discourses," 8vo, 1847; and of many occasional sermons and addresses. Under his supervision the coll. has enlarged her resources and the number of her students.

Hopkins, SAMUEL, b. Waterbury, Ct., 1693, minister of W. Springfield, Ms., from June 1, 1720, to his d., Oct. 6, 1755. Y.C. 1718. Great-grandson of John of Cambridge,

Hopkins, SAMUEL, D.D. (B.U. 1790), founder of the Hopkinsian divinity, b. Waterbury, Ct., Sept. 17, 1721; d. Newport, R.I., Dec. 20, 1803. Y.C. 1741. Before his 15th year he was chiefly occupied in farming. He studied divinity with Jonathan Edwards; was ord. pastor of the church in Housatunnuc, Dec. 28, 1743; was dismissed Jan. 18, 1769; and was settled at Newport, Apr. 11, 1770. During the British occupancy of Newport in 1776–80, he preached in various places. Returning to his parish, he found it so much impoverished, that, for the remainder of his life, Dr. Hopkins was dependent for his maintenance upon weekly contributions and the voluntary aid of a few friends. So powerfully did he oppose slavery, that in 1774 a law was passed, forbidding the importation of negroes into the Colony; and in 1784 it was declared by the legisl. that all children of slaves born after the following Mar. should be free. He also, as early as 1773, formed a plan for evangelizing Africa, and colonizing it with free negroes from America. Besides his numerous sermons, addresses, and pamphlets, he pub. a Life of Pres. Edwards, Lives of Susannah Anthony and Mrs. Osborn, and left behind him sketches of his own life, and a Treatise on the Millennium, pub. Boston, 1854. His "System of Theology" is his great work. His entire works were pub. by Dr. West in 1805, and again, with a Memoir of his life and character by Dr. Park, by the Doctrinal Tract and Book Society (Boston, 1852). Dr. Hopkins is the hero of Mrs. H. B. Stowe's "Minister's Wooing."

Hosmer, HARRIET G., artist, b. Watertown, Ms., Oct. 9, 1830. Being naturally of a delicate constitution, her father, a physician, encouraged her to pursue a course of physical training unusual to her sex. At an early age she began modelling in clay. Having completed her school education, she took a regular course of anatomical instruction at the med. coll. of St. Louis. In the summer of 1851 she returned home, and commenced her bust of "Hesper," which, on its completion in marble in 1852, attracted much attention in Boston; and her father placed her under the instruction of Gibson the sculptor in Rome. Her busts of "Daphne" and "Medusa" were followed by a statue of "Ænone." For the public library of St. Louis she executed her best known work, "Beatrice Cenci." In the summer of 1855 she modelled a charming statue of "Puck," the popularity of which procured her orders for several copies. Pecuniary reverses having overtaken her father, she has latterly relied on her art for support, and is now permanently established among the professional sculptors of Rome. Among her works are a full-length reclining figure of a young girl for a funeral monument in the Church of Saint Andrea della Fratti in Rome; a fountain with figures illustrating the myth of Hylas and the water-nymphs; and a "Will o' the Wisp," designed as a pendant to "Puck." In the latter part of 1859 she finished a statue of "Zenobia in Chains," a work on which she had labored enthusiastically two years, to the serious injury of her health. Her other works are a statue of Thomas H. Benton, cast in bronze, and fixed at Lafayette Park, St. Louis; "The Sleeping Faun;" a fountain designed for Lady Alford; a gateway for the entrance to an art gallery at Ashridge Hall, Eng.; and a design for a "Lincoln Monument," to be placed at Washington. — *Em. Howe, Richard, Earl, a British adm., b. 19 Mar. 1725; d. 5 Aug. 1799. Third son of the second viscount; educated at Westminster and Eton; was a midshipm. in Anson's fleet in 1739; and was made post-capt. for gallantry in 1745. M.P. from Dartmouth in 1757; succeeded to the family titles and estates on the death of his bro. in Amer. in 1758. He displayed extraordinary courage and coolness on many occasions; was made treas. of the navy in 1765; and rear. adm. of the Blue, 18 Oct. 1770. Sent in com. of a fleet to Amer. in 1776, his judicious co-operation was of great service to the army. As joint commiss. with his bro. Sir William, he made several attempts to secure a peaceful adjustment of the strife between the Colonies and the mother-country, and expressed sorrow at his want of success. In Aug. 1778 he had an indecisive action with a superior French fleet under D'Estaing off the coast of R.I., both fleets being much shattered by a severe storm. On his return home in 1782 he was made adm. of the Blue, and created a viscount. In Sept. 1782 he succeeded in relieving Gibraltar, for which he was thanked by both houses of parliament; made adm. of the White 24 Sept. 1787; and raised to an earldom 19 Aug. 1788. June 1, 1794, Howe obtained a complete victory over the French fleet, for which he was rewarded with a medal, the order of the garter, and the post of adm. of the fleet, which he resigned in Apr. 1797. His last service was to prevail on the mutineers at Spithead to return to their duty. A severe criticism, probably by Lord George Germaine, on his naval conduct of the Amer. war, was pub. in 1779. He replied, with a "Narrative of the Transactions of the Fleet in 1778." A monument was erected to his memory in St. Paul's Cathedral. — See Memoir by Barrow, 8vo, Lond. 1838.

Howe, Robert, maj.-gen., b. Eng.; d at the residence of Gen. Clark, near Wilmington, N.C., in Jan. 1787. Was in the English service before the war. In 1775 he was proclaimed against by Gov. Martin as "Robert Howes, alias Howe." Among the earliest and most uncompromising of the patriots of N.C.; member of the legisl. 1773; member of the com. of safety for the county of Brunswick; and col. of the 2d N. C. regt. of militia. He, together with Cornelius Harnett, was excepted from pardon by Sir H. Clinton in 1776. App. col. of the first N. C. regt., he marched into Va. soon after the affair at Great Bridge, and joined Col. Woodford at Norfolk, in opposition to Lord Dunmore. For his activity during this campaign, Congress (Feb. 29, 1776), app. him brig.-gen. in the Cont. army, and ordered him to Va. In the spring of 1776 his plantation near old Brunswick village was ravaged by Lord Cornwallis. He was made maj.-gen. Oct. 20, 1777; and in the following summer com. an unsuccessful exped. against Florida. Gen. Howe stationed himself with 600 regulars, and a small body of militia, for the defence of Savannah, menaced by Gen. Prevost. Here he was surprised in the night, and defeated by the British under Lieut.-Col. Campbell. Honorably acquitted by a court-martial, his conduct was severely criticised by Christopher Gadsden, and a duel was the consequence: neither party, however, was injured. Howe afterwards joined Washington on the Hudson; and early in 1781 com. the troops sent to quell the mutiny in the Pa. and N. J. regts., and for his judicious performance of the duty was thanked by the com.-in-chief. In June, 1783, he was ordered on a similar duty to Phila. In May, 1785, he was app. by Congress to treat with the Western Indians. He was well versed in tactics, a rigid disciplinarian, a good engineer, and a man of cultivated mind.

Howe, Samuel Gridley, M.D., physician and philanthropist; b. Boston, Nov. 10, 1801. Brown U. 1821. He studied medicine in Boston, and served as a surgeon in the Greek war for independence in 1824–7. After organizing a regular surgical service, at the head of which he was placed, he returned to America to procure help for the Greeks, who were threatened with famine. He established a colony on the Isthmus of Corinth; but took the swamp-fever in one of his journeys, and was obliged to leave the country in the spring of 1830. He visited Switzerland; was in Paris during the revol. of July; and in the summer of 1831 returned to the U. S. In the following autumn he became interested in the project of establishing an institution for the blind in Boston. He accepted the charge; visited Europe to acquire the necessary information, and engage teachers; and the institution, put in operation in 1832, has since been under his control. While in Paris, he was made president of the Polish committee, and undertook to carry and distribute funds for the relief of the Polish army in Prussia, but was arrested, and imprisoned for about 6 weeks, by the Prussian Govt. He was for many years prominent in the antislavery party in Ms. Author of an "Historical Sketch

Howe, Sir William, viscount, a British gen., b. 10 Aug. 1729; d. 12 July, 1814. Younger bro. of the adm.; and, by illegitimate descent, an uncle of King George III. He studied some time at Eton; became a cornet of dragoons; and disting. himself particularly under Wolfe at Quebec. Col. 4th Foot 1764; maj.-gen. 1772. Arrived in Boston in May, 1775; and com. at the battle of Bunker's Hill, June 17. On the departure of Gen. Gage, he became com.-in-chief of the British forces in America. Forced to evacuate Boston in March, 1776, he proceeded to Halifax, and in Aug. landed at Staten Island. He defeated the Americans, 27 Aug., at Long Island; took possession of N. Y. City, Sept. 15; Oct. 28, defeated Washington at White Plains; and, Nov. 16, captured Fort Washington, with its garrison of over 2,000 men; in July, 1777, he sailed to Chesapeake Bay; defeated Washington at the Brandywine, Sept. 11; and entered Phila. Sept. 26. He repulsed the attack of Washington at Germantown 4 Oct., and spent the remainder of his stay in Phila. in indolence and pleasure. Superseded by Sir H. Clinton early in 1778, a grand entertainment, called the mischianza, was given in his honor by the officers, 18 May, 1778; soon after which he returned home. On the investigation of his conduct by parliament in 1779, the opinion of Gen. Grey, Lord Cornwallis, and other military men, was, that he had done all that could be expected, considering the insufficiency of his force. Made lieut.-gen. of ordnance in 1782; in 1786 col. 19th Dragoons, and full gen.; gov. of Berwick in 1795; and in 1799, on the death of his bro., succeeded to the Irish viscounty. At the time of his death he was a privy councillor, and gov. of Plymouth. Howe had neither sufficient experience nor ability for the important com. assigned him in America. He was, with his bro. the admiral, a commiss. to settle the difficulties with the Americans. He pub. a narrative of his operations in N. America in 1779–80.

Hudson, Henry, an English discoverer, of whose parentage or education nothing is known. He was sent out in 1607 by some London merchants, in a small vessel, for the purpose of exploring a north-east passage to China and Japan. He sailed May 1 with a crew of only 10 men and a boy beside himself, and, proceeding beyond the 80th deg. of lat., returned to Eng. in Sept. The next year, in a second voyage, he landed at Nova Zembla, but could proceed no farther eastward. He undertook in 1609 a third voyage, under the patronage of the Dutch E. I. Company. Being unsuccessful in his attempts to find a north-east passage, he sailed for Davis's Straits, but struck the continent of America in 44° N. lat., and, holding a southerly course, discovered Cape Cod, on which he landed. He then pursued his course to the Chesapeake, and, returning along the coast, entered the river now bearing his name, which he ascended ab. 50 leagues in a boat. His last voyage was undertaken in 1610, when he was fitted out by Sir Thomas Smith, Sir Dudley Digges, and other friends. He sailed April 17 in the bark "Discovery" with a crew of 23 men, and on the 4th of June came in sight of Greenland. Proceeding westward, he reached, in 60 degs. of lat., the strait bearing his name. Through this he advanced along the coast of Labrador, which he named Nova Britannia, until it issued into the vast bay, which is also called after him. He resolved to winter in the most southern part of it; and the ship was drawn up in a small creek, where they sustained extreme privations, owing to the severity of the climate. Hudson, however, fitted up his shallop for further discoveries; but unable to communicate with the natives, or revictual his ship, with tears in his eyes he distrib. his little remaining bread to his men, and prepared to return. Having a dissatisfied and mutinous crew, he imprudently threatened to set some of them ashore, when he was seized by a body of them at night, and set adrift in his own shallop with his son John and seven of the most infirm of the crew, and never afterwards heard of. A small part of the crew, after enduring incredible hardships, arrived at Plymouth in Sept. 1611. Hudson pub. "Divers Voyages and Northern Discoveries," 1607; "A Second Voyage for finding a Passage to the E. Indies by the North-east," 1608. Accounts of some of his other voyages have been pub. in Purchas's "Pilgrims." "A Collection of Documents forming a Monograph of the Voyages of Henry Hudson," edited with an Introduction by George Asher, was pub. in London by the Hakluyt Society in 1859. — See J. M. Read's (jun.) Hist. Inquiry concerning Hudson, 8vo, 1866.

Hudson, Henry Norman, clergyman and essayist, b. Cornwall, Vt., Jan. 28, 1814. Mid. Coll. 1840. He was brought up a farmer, and apprenticed to a coach-maker in Middlebury. He taught school a year in Ky., and 2 years in Huntsville, Ala., where he wrote and delivered a course of lectures on Shakspeare, which he afterward delivered successfully in many places, and finally printed in N.Y., 2 vols. 12mo, 1848. Entering the Ep. church in 1844, he was ord. in 1849 to the priesthood. He has since edited an edition of Shakspeare, 11 vols. 12 mo, Boston, 1850–7; for a short time edited the Church Monthly, and contrib. to various periodicals.

Huger, FRANCIS KINLOCH, d. Charleston, S.C., Feb. 15, 1855, a. 81. Son of Col. Benj. Huger, who was killed before the lines of Charleston in 1780; and was the pupil of the celebrated John Hunter. While at Vienna in 1798, he joined Dr. Eric Bollman in an attempt to liberate Lafayette from the dungeons of Olmutz, — an enterprise that led to the protracted incarceration of the young patriots. The Marquis de Lafayette first landed on American soil, on the plantation of Huger's father, in 1777. In 1798, on his liberation, and return to his native land, he was app. a capt. in the army. On the breaking-out of the war of 1812 he was app. lieut.-col. 2d regt. of art.; adj.-gen. (rank of col.) Apr. 6, 1813. Col. H. served in both branches of the S. C. legisl.

Huger, ISAAC, brig.-gen. Revol. army, b. Limerick plantation, S. C., Mar. 19, 1742; d. Charleston, Nov. 1797. Of Huguenot descent. He was one of five patriot bros. disting. in the struggle for independence, — DANIEL, a delegate to Congress 1786–8, and a representative from 1789 to '93, d. 1799; JOHN, well known in the councils of the State, of which he was sec., d. 1804; FRANCIS, who was an officer at the battle of Fort Moultrie, and Q. M. gen. Southern dept., d. Charleston, S. C., Aug. 1800; Maj. BENJAMIN, who fell at the lines of Charleston May 11, 1780. Their parents were wealthy; and the sons completed their education in Europe. Isaac was an officer in the Cherokee exped. in 1760; was made lieut.-col. 1st S.C. regt. June 17, 1775; and subsequently col. of the 5th regt. He opposed the invasion of Ga. by Campbell and Prevost, with whom he had several skirmishes, but was obliged to retreat before his skilful and superior enemy. App. brig.-gen. Jan. 19, 1779, he com. the left wing at the battle of Stono, June 20, 1779, and was wounded while gallantly leading his men. In the unsuccessful attack on Savannah, Huger led the Ga. and S. C. militia. During the siege of Charleston, with a body of light troops he was employed in cutting off supplies to the enemy, and keeping open the communication between the town and country, but suffered a surprise at Monk's Corner, where his force was defeated and dispersed by Tarleton and Webster. He joined the army of Greene; com. the Virginians at the battle of Guilford, and was severely wounded; and com. the right wing at Hobkirk's Hill, where his efforts to regain the day exposed him to the greatest dangers. He returned to his estate at the close of the war.

Hughes, AARON K., capt. U.S.N., b. N.Y. Oct. 20, 1821. Midshipm. Oct. 20, 1838; lieut. Sept. 9, 1853; com. Nov. 16, 1862; capt. Feb. 10, 1869; lighthouse insp. 1867–8. Atl. block. squad., 1862–3; com. steamer "Cimmaron," S. Atl. block. squad., 1863–4; and in several engagements with rebels on the Atlantic coast 1861–4. While in com. of steamer "Water Witch," in Nov. 1861, he endeavored to cut out a schooner which had grounded near Fort Morgan, but was prevented by the guns of the fort. Nov. 9, 1862, he accomp. an exped. which destroyed St Mary's, Ga., and drove out a large body of rebels concealed there. — Hamersly.

Hughes, JOHN, D.D., a Catholic prelate, b. County Tyrone, Ireland, 1797; d. N.Y. City, Jan. 3, 1864. The son of a respectable farmer. He emig. to America in 1817. His father placed him with a florist; but he devoted his spare time to study, and entered the Theol. Sem. of Mt. St. Mary's, Emmetsburg, Md., where he remained several years, most of the time as a teacher. Ord. priest in 1825, and was settled in a parish in Phila. In 1830 and '34 he carried on public controversies with Rev. J. Breckenridge, both of which were pub. Consec. Jan. 7, 1838, coadjutor of Bishop Dubois of N.Y.; upon the death of the latter, 1842, he succeeded to the office, and was made archbishop in 1850. His first measures were directed to a reform in the tenure of church property, then vested in lay trustees. In 1839 he visited France, Austria, and Italy, to obtain pecuniary aid for his diocese. Having purchased property at Fordham in Westchester Co., he organized and opened there in 1841 the St. John's Coll. and the Theol. Sem. of St. Joseph. He was prominent in the effort made by the Catholics to modify the existing school-system in their favor, and was successful. In Aug. 1842 he held the first diocesan synod of N. Y. His "Rules for the Administration of Churches without Trustees," pub. in 1845, embody the system adopted by this synod. Offered in 1846, by Pres. Polk, a special mission to Mexico, he declined it. In 1847 he delivered in the Representatives Hall at Washington, by request of Congress, a lecture, "Christianity the Only Source of Moral, Social, and Political Regeneration." The first provincial council of N.Y. was held in 1854, and attended by 7 suffragans. Involved in a controversy with Hon. Erastus Brooks on the church-property question, the archbishop subsequently collected and pub. the letters on both sides, with an introd. reviewing the trustee system, N.Y. 1855. He pub. a number of lectures and pamphlets. At the commencement of the Rebellion in 1861, he, with Thurlow Weed, was selected by Sec. Seward to go to Europe to counteract the plottings of rebel agents. His sister ELLEN (Mother Angela), superior of St. Vincent's Hospital, b. Ireland ab. 1800, d. N. Y. City, Sept. 5, 1866. She came to this country in 1818, and was educated in a convent at Frederick, Md. She joined the Sisterhood of Charity at 22; and in 1846 was chosen superior for 6 years. For the last 11 years of her life she had been director of the hospital in 11th Street. During the war she was active in aiding the sanitary commission.

Hughes, ROBERT BALL, sculptor, b. London, Jan. 19, 1806; d. Boston, March 5, 1868. At the age of 12 he made out of wax-candle ends a bas-relief copy of a picture representing the wisdom of Solomon, which was afterward cast in silver. He was 7 years in the studio of E. H. Bailey, where he successfully competed for the prizes awarded by the Royal Acad., gaining the large silver medal for the best copy in bas-relief of the Apollo Belvedere; also the silver medal of the Society of Arts and Sciences for a copy of the Barberini Faun; the large silver medal for the best original model from life; and a gold medal for an original composition, "Pandora brought by Mercury to Epimetheus." He next made busts of George IV., the Dukes of Sussex, York, and Cambridge, besides a statuette of George IV., which was subsequently cast in bronze. He emig. in 1829 to New York. His first work of importance was the marble statue of Hamilton, which was destroyed by fire in 1835, and was the first work of its class executed in America. In Trinity Church, N.Y., is his monumental alto-relief of life-size in memory of Bishop Hobart. In the Boston Athenæum are his casts of "Little Nell," and the group "Uncle Toby and Widow Wadman." A statue of "Oliver Twist" is in the coll. of his early patron, the late Duke of Devonshire. Among his other works are a model for an equestrian statue of Washington, intended for the city of Phila.; a "Crucifixion;" the statue of Nathl. Bowditch in bronze in Mt. Auburn Cemetery, Cambridge, Ms.; a spirited statuette of Gen. Warren; and a bust of W. Irving. Mr. Hughes appeared for a season as a lecturer upon art. Hull, ISAAC, commo. U. S. N., b. Derby, Ct., 9 Mar. 1775; d. Phila. 13 Feb. 1843. Joseph his father, a Revol. officer, long an inmate of the Jersey prison-ship, d. Jan. 1826, a. 75. Isaac entered the merchant-service, and at 19 com. a ship which sailed to Lond. Made a lieut. in the U. S. N. 9 Mar. 1798; master-comdt. 18 May, 1804; and capt. 23 Apr. 1806. In 1800, while 1st lieut. of "The Constitution," he manned a small sloop from that vessel; ran into Port Platte, Hayti, at noonday; boarded and took a French letter-of-marque; and then landed, and spiked the guns of the battery before the com. officer could prepare for defence. He also disting. himself before Tripoli, on the coast of Barbary, in the exped. of Gen. Eaton against Algiers, and in the Bay of Naples, protecting American shipping against an apprehended onslaught of the French. 12 July, 1812, he sailed in com. of "The Constitution" from Annapolis, and, after a 3 days' chase by a British squad., escaped by skilful seamanship. The wind was light and baffling; and Hull resorted to the novel and successful expedient of sending his boats ahead with a kedge, to which the ship was warped up; the kedge then being weighed while another was carried out. In this way, he left his pursuers before they discovered how it was done. Aug. 19 he encountered and captured the British frigate "Guerrière" after an action at close quarters of about half an hour. She was so much injured, that she was burned. For this capture, the first in the war, Com. Hull received from Congress a gold medal. He was subsequently a naval commissioner; com. the navy-yards at Boston, Portsmouth, and Washington; and in Oct. 1842 took up his residence in Phila.

Huntington, DANIEL, painter, b. New York, Oct. 14, 1816. Grandson of Judge Benj., son of Benj., a N. Y. broker, who d. 3 Aug. 1850, a. 73. His taste for painting is said to have been first excited by a visit to the studio of Trumbull, who decidedly discouraged the young aspirant. While a student at Ham. Coll., N.Y., he received from Elliott the portrait-painter a strong bias for his art, and, with implements borrowed from him, took likenesses of his college-companions, and also painted some comic pieces. Entering the studio of Prof. Morse in 1835, he produced "The Barroom Politician," "A Toper Asleep," &c. In 1836 he spent several months in the vicinity of the Hudson Highlands. In 1839 he went to Europe, and in Florence painted "The Sybil" and "The Florentine Girl." Removing to Rome soon after, he painted "The Shepherd-Boy" and "Early Christian Prisoners." Returning to New York, he was long employed almost wholly upon portraits, his only compositions of importance being "Mercy's Dream," and "Christiana and her Children," from the "Pilgrim's Progress." Compelled by inflammation of the eyes to relinquish his labors, he in 1844 went to Rome, whence he sent back to America "The Roman Penitents," "Italy," "The Sacred Lesson," "The Communion of the Sick," and some landscapes. He returned to New York in 1846, where he has since resided, except during occasional visits to Eng. Some of his other works are "Lady Jane Grey and Feckenham in the Tower," "Henry VIII. and Queen Catharine Parr," "The Marys at the Sepulchre," "Queen Mary signing the Death-Warrant of Lady Jane Grey," "The Republican Court." He recently painted in Eng. another picture of "Mercy's Dream." His coloring is singularly beautiful; and he excels in female heads and those of old men. Pres. of the Nat. Acad. of Design 1862–69.

considered superior to any one in the Colonies. To a superior mode of execution he added an Hogarthian talent of character and humor. Among his engravings is a descriptive representation of Hudson, a swindler and forger, standing in the pillory, the likenesses of some well-known characters being introduced among the spectators. He was probably the first to engrave on copper in the U.S.; a miniature likeness of Rev. Dr. Sewall, engraved by him in 1764, being extant. He engraved the seal of H.U. — N. E. Mag. iii. 1.

Hurlbut, Stephen Augustus, lawyer and soldier, b. Charleston, S.C., Mar. 24, 1815. He studied and practised law in Charleston until the breaking-out of the Florida war, in which he served as adj. in a S.C. regt. In 1845 he went to Ill., and settled in practice at Belvidere. Member of the Ill. Const. Conv. of 1847, and several times represented Boone Co. in the legisl.; app. brig.-gen. of vols. 17 May, 1861, and com. at Fort Donelson after its capture. When Gen. Grant's army moved up the Tenn. River, he com. the 4th division; took part in the battle of Shiloh; was afterward stationed at Memphis; and after the battle of Corinth, in Oct. 1862, pursued and engaged the defeated Confederates; maj.-gen. Sept. 17, 1862. In Sept. 1863, he com. at Memphis; com. a corps under Sherman in the exped. to Meridian in Feb. 1864; and succeeded Banks in com. of the dept. of the Gulf; minister to Colombia 1869–73; M.C., 1873.

Husbands, Herman, insurgent, b. Pa.; d. near Phila. Mar. 1795. Removing to Orange Co., N.C., he became a member of the legisl., and leader of the Regulators, a party which was organized in 1768 for the forcible redress of public grievances. He pub. in 1770 a full account of the rise of the troubles. A battle took place, May 16, 1771, between Gov. Tryon with 1,100 men and 2,000 Regulators, on the banks of the Allamance, in which the latter were defeated. Husbands escaped to Pa., where in 1778 he was a member of the legisl., and was concerned in the Whiskey Insurrection in 1794; and was assoc. with Gallatin, Brackinridge, and others as a com. of safety. After a short imprisonment in Phila., he set out on his return home, but died on the way. He was originally a member of the Society of Friends, and was versed in theological lore.

Huske, Ellis, councillor of N.H. 1733–55; d. 1755. Bro. of Gen. Huske, disting. at Dettingen and Culloden. Postmaster of Boston 1734; superseded in the office of dep. postmr.-gen. of the Colonies by Franklin and Hunter 1753. Pub. the Boston Weekly Post-Boy from Oct 1754 to 1755. Supposed author of "The Present State of N. America," Lond. 1755. Mary, his wife, d. 8 Mar. 1746, a. 40. He resided in Portsmouth, N.H., previous to 1734.

Huske, John, son of the preceding, b. Portsmouth, N.H., ab. 1721; d. Eng. 1773. Educated in Boston, and bred a merchant, he became in 1764 a member of the British parliament from Malden, Essex; and was re-elected to the succeeding parliament. For his share in bringing about the Stamp Act, his effigy was hung with Grenville's in the Liberty Tree, Boston, 1 Nov. 1765. A letter from Joseph Reed thus describes him: "Huske, a flashy, superficial fellow, by stock-jobbing, and servility to the Townshend family, raised himself from poverty and obscurity to a seat in parliament. The first use he made of it was to injure his country by proposing to raise £500,000 per annum by taxing the Colonies. Having disobliged his old patron Charles Townshend, and the ministry not needing his vote (though adopting his plan, taking no notice of him), he tacked about, and endeavored to ward off the stroke; but it was then too late: and they laughed at him."

Hutchins, Thomas, geographer, b. Monmouth Co., N. J., ab. 1730; d. Pittsburg, Apr. 28, 1789. Before he was 16, he went West; entered the service as ensign; afterward became paym., and capt. 60th (Roy. Amer.) regt.; was assist. engineer in Bouquet's exped.; and was disting. in a campaign against the Indians in Fla. He was in Lond. at the opening of the Revol. war; and his zeal in the cause of his country induced him to refuse some excellent offers there. Suspected of holding a corresp. with Franklin, then in France, he was in 1779 thrown into a dungeon, and lost in one day £12,000. After 6 weeks' confinement, he was examined and liberated. He went to France; thence to Charleston, S.C., where he joined Gen. Greene; and was made geographer-general. He pub. "A Topographical Description of Va., Pa., Md., and Carolina, with Maps," Lond. 1778; "An Historical and Topog. Description of La., West Fla., and Phila.," 1784. Dr. Morse was much indebted to him in the compilation of his gazetteer. He furnished the maps and plates for the "Account of Bouquet's Exped. against the Ohio Indians," written by William Smith, D.D., of Phila., and pub. Lond. 1766. He wrote 3 papers for the Phila. Trans. 1775, '76, and '83, and a paper in Trans. Amer. Soc. ii. 50.

Hutchinson, Anne, founder of the Antinomian party in N.E., b. at Alford, Lincolnshire, Eng., in 1591; bap. July 20; d. Westchester Co., N.Y., Aug. 1643. Dau. of Rev. Francis Marbury, who was rector of St. Martin Vintry and other London parishes. Her mother was Bridget Dryden, gr.-aunt of the celebrated poet, John Dryden. Was interested in the preaching of John Cotton, and her relative John Wheelwright, and, desirous of enjoying the ministry of the former, came to Boston, Sept. 18, 1634; was adm. a member of the church, Nov. 2; and soon acquired esteem and influence. She instituted meetings of the women of the church to discuss sermons and doctrines, in which she displayed great familiarity with Scripture, but made enemies by her innovating theories. Two years after her arrival, the strife between her supporters and opponents broke out into public action. "The dispute," says Bancroft, "infused its spirit into every thing; it interfered with the levy of troops for flicting claims of Glover and Cary to the chief magistracy. By the aid of Gov. Spotswood of Va., Cary's armed resistance was put down, and quiet restored. An Indian war having been begun by a massacre of the settlers on the Roanoke and Chowan, Sept. 11, 1711, Gov. Hyde called out the militia, and defeated them with great slaughter in the following year. In the summer the ravages of yellow-fever were added to the horrors of war; and the gov. fell a victim. — Wheeler's N. C.

Hyde, NANCY MARIA, teacher, b. Norwich, Ct., Mar. 21, 1792; d. there Mar. 28, 1816. She excelled in painting and embroidery. Her writings, with Memoir by her friend Miss Huntley, afterward Mrs. Sigourney, were pub. 1816.

Iberville (dé-bĕr'-vēl'), PIERRE LEMOINE D', a disting. seaman, father of the Colony of Louisiana, b. Montreal, July 20, 1661; d. Havana, July 9, 1706. He was one of 11 brothers, who were all active in Canadian affairs. He went early to sea; was a disting. vol. in the midnight attack on Schenectady; commanded the exped. which recovered Fort Nelson from the British (1686); successfully invaded Newfoundland; and was a victor in naval contests (1697) in Hudson's Bay. In 1698 he was commissioned by the French Govt. to explore the mouth of the Mpi., and to erect a fort near it. With 4 vessels and ab. 200 settlers, he left Rochefort Oct. 17, 1698, and Feb. 2, 1699, arrived at the Island of Massacre, near Mobile. Accompanied by his bro. de Bienville and 48 men in 2 barges, and provisions for 15 days, he entered the Mpi. Mar. 2, ascended to the village of Bayagoulas, and also visited the Orimas. Returning to the Bay of Biloxi, Iberville erected a fort as a testimony of French jurisdiction, the command of which he gave to his two bros., Sanvolle and Bienville. This fort was soon after transferred to the western bank of the Mobile River, the first European settlement in Ala. He sailed for France, but returned when the French supremacy of the Mpi. was endangered by the English. In 1700 he ascended the Mpi. as far as the country of the Natchez, while his bro. explored Western La. Iberville also built fortifications on the Island of Massacre, which he named Dauphine Island. Attacked by yellow-fever, he escaped with broken health. In 1706, in com. of 3 vessels, he captured the English Island of Nevis.

Imlay, GILBERT, capt. Revol. army. He pub. "Topog. Description of the Western Terr. of N. A.," 8vo, Lond. 1792; the same, with Supplement by J. Filson, 2 vols. N. Y. 1793; "The Emigrants," a novel, 3 vols. 12mo, 1793.

Danaë was on exhibition. Attracting the notice of Jarvis, who, on seeing him, exclaimed, "By Heavens! the very head for a painter," he served a year's apprenticeship with him; m., and devoted himself to miniature-painting, in which he excelled. He afterward applied himself to portraits, and turned his talents to good advantage in landscape and genre painting, attaining such distinction as to be chosen vice-pres. of the Nat. Acad. of Design. Visiting Eng. for his health in 1844, he painted portraits of Wordsworth, Chalmers, Macaulay, and others. Returning home in 1845 in feeble health, he undertook to furnish for the National Capitol a series of pictures illustrating the settlement of the West, but did not live to complete the first, — a representation of Daniel Boone's residence in Ky. His conversational powers were of a high order, and he possessed a fund of anecdote and wit. Among his best efforts are his portraits of Chief Justice Marshall and Bishop White, his "Rip Van Winkle waking from his Dream," "Mumble the Peg," and "Boyhood of Washington." He was one of the most versatile of American artists. A collection of 127 of his paintings was exhibited for the benefit of his widow and children. His dau. Sallie m. J. R. Drake of Buffalo. JOHN O'BRIEN, artist, son of Henry, after a successful career in the West as a portrait-painter, opened a studio in N.Y., where his flower pieces and small genre pictures found a ready sale. His facility is remarkable. In 1866 he went to Italy. A picture called "Sunny Thoughts" is highly commended. — See Tuckerman's Book of the Artists.

Inman, JOHN, journalist, b. Utica, N.Y., 1805; d. N.Y. Mar. 30, 1850. Bro. of Henry. With little education, he taught school 2 years in N.C., 1823–5; then passed a year in Europe, and, after studying law, became editor of the Standard, afterward of the Spirit of the Times, then of the old N.Y. Mirror, and in 1834 assist. ed. of the Commercial Advertiser, becoming chief on the death of Mr. Stone in 1844. He was some years editor of the Columbian Mag., one entire number of which was from his pen; and was a frequent contrib. to the periodicals of the day. In 1833 he m. He subsequently served in the West Indies; was made gen. in 1812; and created a baronet Sept. 19, 1809.

Irving, PETER, M.D. (Col. Coll. 1794), writer, bro. of Washington Irving, b. Oct. 30, 1771; d. N.Y., June 27, 1838. He studied, but never practised, medicine; and in 1802 became ed. and proprietor of the Morning Chronicle, a Democ. journal, to which his bros. Washington and John Treat, Paulding, W. A. Duer, and Rudolph Bunner, were contribs. Returning from European travel in 1807, he projected with his bro. "Knickerbocker's History of New York." He returned to Europe in 1809, and remained until 1836. He pub. "Giovanni Sbogarro, a Venetian Tale," N.Y. 1820.

Irving, THEODORE, LL.D. (Un. Coll. 1851), author, b. New York, May 9, 1809. Col. Coll. 1837. He joined his uncle, Washington Irving, in Spain in 1828, and resided with him in Eng., studying general literature in Paris, and afterward studying law in London and New York. Professor of history and belles-lettres in Geneva Coll., N.Y., from 1836 to 1849, and afterward held for 3 years a similar professorship in the N.Y. Free Acad. Taking orders in the Epis. Church in 1854, he became rector of St. Andrew's Parish, Richmond, Staten Island. Besides many contribs. to periodicals, he is the author of "The Conquest of Florida by De Soto," 1835 and 1851, esteemed for its easy and elegant style; and of "The Fountain of Living Waters," 1854, a devotional work.

Irving, WASHINGTON, LL.D., author, b. N.Y. City, Apr. 3, 1783; d. Tarrytown, N.Y., Nov. 28, 1859. Wm., his father, was a Scotch emigrant; and his mother was an Englishwoman. At the age of 16 he began the study of law, but did not enter upon its practice. At 19 he wrote a series of articles under the signature of "Jonathan Oldstyle," pub. in the Morning Chronicle, edited by his brother Peter. From May, 1804, to March, 1806, he was in Europe for his health. In 1807 he pub., in conjunction with his brother William, and J. K. Paulding, "Salmagundi;" in Dec. 1808, "Knickerbocker's History of N.Y.;" ed. the Analectic Mag. during the war of 1812–14, to which he contrib. a series of biographies of the naval officers of the U. S.; and in May, 1815, went to Europe, where he resided 17 years. He had previously engaged with two of his brothers in mercantile pursuits as a silent partner. The failure of the commercial house with which he was connected threw him upon his literary resources, and, aided by Sir Walter Scott, he brought out "The Sketch-Book" in Lond. in 1820, which brought him fame and profit; and, after a year's residence in Paris, "Bracebridge Hall" appeared in May, 1822. He passed the following winter in Dresden; returned to Paris in 1823, and in May, 1824, to Lond., to pub. "The Tales of a Traveller;" returned to Paris in Aug.; and in the autumn of 1825 visited the south of France. He went to Madrid in Feb. 1826; pub. his "Life of Columbus" in 1828; made a tour to the south of Spain; in 1829 pub. "The Conquest of Granada;" and resided three months in the Alhambra, where he prepared the work pub. under that name in 1832. In 1829–31 he was sec. of legation to the Amer. embassy in Lond., and received one of the 50-guinea gold medals provided by George IV. for eminence in historical compositions. In May, 1832, he returned to N.Y.; in 1835 pub. "Tour on the Prairies," "Abbotsford and Newstead Abbey," and "Legends of the Conquest of Granada;"

Ives, Levi Silliman, D.D., LL.D., divine and author, b. Meriden, Ct., Sept. 16, 1797; d. Manhattanville, near N.Y. City, Oct. 13, 1867. Brought up on his father's farm in Turin, N.Y. He studied at the acad. at Lowville, and served nearly a year under Gen. Pike in the war with Eng. He entered Ham. Coll. in 1816, but, on account of poor health, left before the close of his senior year. Joining the Epis. Church in 1819, he studied theology at N.Y. under Bishop Hobart (whose dau. Rebecca he m. in 1825), and received deacon's orders in Aug. 1822. He was first a missionary at Batavia, N. Y.; the next year took charge of Trin. Church, Phila., and was ord. priest by Bishop White; in 1827 he took charge of Christ Church, Lancaster, Pa.; at the end of the year became assist. minister of Christ Church, N.Y.; 6 months after was made rector of St. Luke's; and Sept. 22, 1831, was consec. bishop of N.C. At Valle Crucis, among the mountains of N.C., he established an institution to promote the cause of education in the church, which occasioned him great pecuniary loss. He manifested a deep sympathy with the efforts for the religious training of the slaves, for whom he prepared a catechism adapted to their comprehension and spiritual wants. Besides charges to the clergy, and occasional sermons, he pub. discourses on the "Apostles' Doctrine and Fellowship," and on the "Obedience of Faith," 1849. Siding strongly with the Tractarian movement, his diocese became alienated, and he was at length thoroughly convinced of the supremacy of the pope. In Dec. 1852 he visited Rome, and was there adm. into the R. C. Church. He vindicated this step in a vol. entitled "The Trials of a Mind in its Progress to Catholicism," 1854. Deposed from his bishopric, Oct. 14, 1853. After his return to Amer. he was employed as prof. of rhetoric in St. Joseph's Theol. Sem. at Fordham, and as lecturer on rhetoric and the English language in the convents of the Sacred Heart and the Sisters of Charity. The last years of his life were devoted to the establishment of an institution at Manhattanville for the protection of destitute children.

in S.C. in 1832, the war with the Seminole Indians, the removal of the deposits from the U.S. Bank, and the controversy which ended in the loss of its charter. He possessed great firmness and decision of character, and was a thoroughly honest and straightforward man. In 1806 he challenged, and killed in a duel, Charles Dickinson (receiving himself a severe wound), by which his popularity was greatly impaired; and in Sept. 1813, in an affray at Nashville with Thomas H. Benton, he was severely wounded by Benton's brother Jesse. If his hot temper led him into more than one affair injurious to his reputation, his humanity and benevolence were frequently exhibited. In 1835 an attempt upon his life was made by Richard Lawrence, afterward confined as a lunatic. His biog. has been written by J. H. Eaton, 1818; William Cobbett, 1834; Amos Kendall, 1844; and by James Parton, 3 vols. 8vo, 1859.

Jackson, CHARLES THOMAS, M.D. (H.U. 1829), chemist, mineralogist, and geologist, b. Plymouth, Ms., June 21, 1805. Descended from Abraham, one of the early settlers of Plymouth, and, on the mother's side, from Rev. John Cotton. While preparing himself for coll. his health failed, and he made an excursion on foot through N.Y. and N.J. with several disting. naturalists. Returning to Boston, he studied medicine. In the summer of 1827, he made, in company with Francis Alger of Boston, a mineralogical and geological survey of Nova Scotia, an account of which is in the Amer. Journal of Science for 1828. In 1829 they renewed this survey, pub. a fuller account in the "Memoirs of the Acad. of Arts and Sciences." In 1829–32 he visited Europe, pursuing his medical and scientific studies at Paris made a pedestrian tour through Central Europe; was at Vienna during the prevalence of the cholera; assisted in the dissection of the bodies of 200 victims of the disease; and pub. a detailed account of his medical observations in the Boston Med. Mag. for 1832. Visiting Italy, he made a geol. tour of Sicily. In 1837 a controversy arose between Prof. Morse and Dr. Jackson in regard to their respective claims to the invention of the magnetic telegraph, the evidence respecting which has been printed. In 1836 he was app. State geologist of Me., of which he made 3 annual reports; in 1839 of R. I., of which he made a report in 1 vol.; in 1840 of N.H., occupying 3 years, of which he pub. the report in 1844. He then explored the wilderness on the southern shore of Lake Superior, and made known to the public the wonderful mineral resources of that region. In 1847–9 he was app. by Congress to survey the mineral lands in Mich., his report of which was pub. in 1850. Dr. Jackson is also a claimant of the discovery of anæsthetics, and is the recipient of various honors on that account. (See Morton, W. T. G.) He has made numerous scientific discoveries, and has furnished many scientific communications to the Journal of Science and Arts, to the Comptes Rendus, and to the Bulletin de la Société Géologicale de France. He has also pub. in the U.S. Patent Office Agric. Reports the results of chemical researches on the cotton-plant, the tobacco-plant, on Indian corn, and on 38 varieties of Amer. grasses. He pub. in 1861 "Manual of Etherization, with a History of the Discovery." — Appleton.

Jackson, GEN. JAMES, soldier and statesman, b. Devonshire, Eng., Sept. 21, 1757; d. Washington, March 19, 1806. In 1772 he came to Savannah, and began to study law. Nature having eminently fitted him for a soldier, he was active in repelling the British from Savannah in March, 1776; com. a company until the fatal Florida exped. of Gen. Howe; made brigade maj. of Ga. militia in 1778, and wounded in the skirmish in which Gen. Screven was killed; took part in the defence of Savannah; and when it fell, Dec. 29, 1778, fled to S. C., where he joined Gen. Moultrie. While on his way, so wretched was his appearance, that some Whigs arrested, tried, and condemned him as a spy; ab. to be executed, he was fortunately recognized by a gentleman of reputation from Ga. In March, 1780, he was severely wounded in a duel; his adversary, Lieut.-Gov. Wells, being killed. He joined Col. Elijah Clark in Aug. 1780, and at the battle of Blackstocks was vol. aide to Sumter; in 1781 he was brig. major to Gen. Pickens, sharing in the victory of the Cowpens; and at the battle of Long Cane, when Col. Clark was disabled, saved his com. from dispersion. He was at the siege of Augusta, and was left in com. of the garrison after the expulsion of the British. He next com. a legionary corps, with which he did good service: at the close of the war the Ga. legisl. gave him a house and lot in Savannah. Engaged successfully in the practice of the law; he m. in 1785; was made brig.-gen. in 1786; and was elected gov. of Ga. in 1788, but declined on account of youth and inexperience. M. C. 1789–91; U. S. senator 1793–5 and 1801–6; maj.-gen. of militia 1792; chiefly instrumental in framing the constitution of Ga. in 1798; and gov. in 1798–1801. While in Congress, he strenuously opposed the bill for the suppression of the slave-trade. He was a man of impetuous temper, but of approved integrity and patriotism. His bro., Gen. Abraham, d. in Jan. 1810.— Nat. Port. Gall.

Jackson, JAMES, M. D., LL.D. (H. U. 1854), physician, bro. of Charles, b. Newburyport, Oct. 3, 1777; d. Boston, Aug. 27, 1867. H. U. 1796. For 6 months after graduating, he was English teacher at Leicester Acad.; he studied medicine under Dr. Holyoke of Salem, and in Lond.; then returned to Boston, where he began practice in 1800. In 1810, with Dr. J. C. Warren, he proposed the establishment of a hospital in Boston. The Asylum for the Insane was soon established at Somerville, and afterward the Ms. Gen. Hospital in Boston, of which Dr. Jackson was the first physician, and resigned in 1835. In 1810 he was chosen prof. of clinical medicine in the med. dept. of H.U.; in 1812 prof. of theory and practice there, and in 1835 was made emeritus prof. His principal publications are, "On the Brunonian System," 1809; "Remarks on the Medical Effects of Dentition," 1812; various articles in the "Transactions of the Ms. Medical Society;" "Syllabus of Lectures," 1816; and "Text-Book of Lectures," 1825–7; A Memoir of his son, James Jackson, jun., who died in 1834; "Letters to a Young Physician," 1855; "Eulogy on Dr. John Warren," 1815. Jackson, THOMAS JONATHAN ("Stonewall"), gen. C.S.A., b. Clarksburg, Va., Jan. 21, 1824; d. at Guinea's Station, Va., May 10, 1863. West Point, 1846 (No. 17 in his class). The death of his father, in 1827, left him dependent upon an uncle, who brought him up a farmer. As a boy he was noted for gravity and sobriety of manners. Entering the 2d Art., he served in Mexico with Magruder's battery; became 1st lieut. Aug. 20, 1847; brev. capt. and major for gallantry at Contreras, Churubusco, and Chapultepec; resigned Feb. 29, 1852, with impaired health; and became a prof. in the Milit. Inst. at Lexington, Va. Embracing the secession movement with enthusiasm, he was made a col.; and May 3, 1861, app. com. of the "Army of Observation" at Harper's Ferry. He encountered Gen. Patterson's advance at Falling Waters, July 2; bore a disting. part, and com. a brigade, in the battle of Bull Run, where, in the language of the Confed. Gen. Bee, "Jackson stood like a stone wall." He was soon after made a brig., and in Sept. a maj.-gen., and assigned to the com. at Winchester. He attacked Gen. Shields at this place, Mar. 23, 1862, and was repulsed. Early in May he turned upon his pursuers, and by a rapid march cut off a detached body at Front Royal, and compelled the Union army under Banks to retreat hastily to the Potomac. Fremont and McDowell endeavored to cut him off; but he succeeded in eluding them by a display of energy, decision, and command of resources, that made his name famous in both Europe and America. Hastening back to Richmond, his timely arrival at Gaines's Mill gave the victory to the Confederates; on the 29th he engaged McClellan's rear-guard at Frazier's Farm; and July 1 shared in the signal defeat of the Confederates at Malvern Hill. Jackson's corps next moved against Gen. Pope; Aug. 9 was fought the severely-contested battle of Cedar Mountain, with the small corps of Gen. Banks. Lee having joined Jackson, the latter was despatched, Aug. 24, to gain Gen. Pope's rear, which he did, capturing, at Manassas, prisoners, cannon, and a large amount of stores. Lee came to his support; and on the 30th was fought the second battle of Manassas. He took part in the invasion of Md.; Sept. 15 captured Harper's Ferry, with 11,000 prisoners, and rejoined Lee at Antietam in season to do the severest fighting at that battle. Lieut.-gen. for the battle of Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862. By his flank movement at Chancellorsville, May 2, 1863, the 11th corps of Hooker's army was routed, and compelled

Jay, Sir James, M.D., b. 1732; d. N. J., Sept. 12, 1815. Bro. of John Jay. Pub. 2 letters (1771–4) rel. to the collection made for the colleges of N.Y. and Phila.; and a work on the gout, 8vo, 1772. While in Eng. as agent of the N.Y. Coll., he was knighted (Mar. 25, 1763), and was involved in a chancery-suit arising out of his collections for the coll.; but he returned home before the Revol.

Jay, John, statesman, b. N. Y., 12 Dec. 1745; d. Bedford, Westchester Co., N.Y., 17 May, 1829. Col. Coll. 1764. Pierre, his great-grandfather, a Huguenot merchant of La Rochelle, fled to Eng. on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. Peter, his father (1704–82), m. in 1728 Mary, dau. of Jacob Van Cortland. John was adm. to the bar in 1768; formed a partnership with R. R. Livingston; soon attained political influence and extensive legal practice; and in 1774, in which year he m. Sarah, dau. of Wm. Livingston, afterward gov. of N. J., was sent as a delegate to the first Congress. Though the youngest member but one, he took a leading part in its proceedings; drew up the able and eloquent "Address to the People of Great Britain;" and, as a member of the com. of corresp., is supposed to have written the reply to the Boston address, in which he opposed the project of non-intercourse. He also wrote the address issued by Congress in 1775 to the people of Canada, and for Gov. Livingston an address to the people of Ireland. Recalled in May, 1776, to aid in forming the govt. of N.Y., his name was not attached to the Decl. of Indep., though it received his cordial support. He was a leading member of the N.Y. conv. of 1776, serving on the most important committees, and actively engaged in repelling invasion, and suppressing Tory combinations. The eloquent address of this conv., dated Fishkill, 23 Dec. 1776, was from his pen. He also reported to the N.Y. conv. in Mar. 1777 a bill of rights; had a chief share in framing the constitution; was in May app. chief justice of N.Y., and one of the council of safety, having dictatorial powers; again a member of Congress, Dec. 1778–Sept. 1779; he presided over that body until app. minister to Spain 27 Sept. to negotiate a loan of two million dollars and the free navigation of the Mpi. After many months of fruitless labor, having in 1781 been app. a commiss., he proceeded to Paris, and, with Adams, Franklin, and others, signed the treaty of peace between the U.S. and Great Britain 3 Sept. 1783. Returning to N.Y. in July, 1784, he was sec. of foreign affairs from Dec. 1784 until 1789. In Apr. 1788, in the riot in N.Y. known as the 'Doctor's Mob," Jay, while aiding in defending the physicians from popular fury, received a dangerous wound in the temple. Oct. 13, 1786, he drew up an elaborate report on the relations between the U.S. and Great Britain. In 1787 he united with Hamilton and Madison in writing "The Federalist," to answer objections to the proposed Federal Constitution. Jay contrib. powerfully to its adoption in the N.Y. conv. in 1788, and, being offered by Washington the choice of offices in his gift, accepted that of chief justice, for which position he was eminently fitted. In 1792 Jay received a majority of the votes for gov. of N.Y.; but, on some technical grounds, George Clinton, the Repub. candidate, was declared elected. In 1794 he reluctantly accepted the mission to negotiate a settlement of the difficulties with Eng. He concluded a treaty, 19 Nov. 1794, providing for payment of pre-Revolutionary debts owed to British subjects, and that Americans should be indemnified for losses sustained by illegal captures, &c. (ab. $10,000,000 were afterward paid on this account). This treaty was assailed with great violence by the party favorable to France, but was carried into effect by a vote of 58 to 51. From 1795 to 1801 he was gov. of N.Y.; and under his administration slavery was abolished in that State. He was again made chief justice of the U.S., his former office, but declined. "In lofty disinterestedness," says Hildreth, "in unyielding integrity," no one of the great men of the Revol. approached so near Washington. — See Life and Writings of, by Wm. Jay, 2 vols. 8vo, N.Y. 1833.

Jay, John, minister to Austria (app. April, 1869), grandson of John, and son of William Jay, b. N.Y. City, June 23, 1817. Col. Coll. 1836. Was adm. to the bar in 1839, and practised law; was a prominent member of the Union League Club of N.Y.; many years a manager and corres. sec. of the N.Y. Hist. Soc., and a member of the Amer. Geog. and Statist. Soc. Author of many antislavery addresses and pamphlets; pamphlets on matters connected with the Epis. Church; and has pub. legal arguments, political addresses, reports, &c. For a list of these, see Duyckinck Suppt.

Jay, Peter Augustus, LL.D. (Col. Coll. 1835), lawyer, pres. N.Y. Hist. Soc.; d. Feb. 20, 1843. Col. Coll. 1794. Eldest son of John Jay, and his private sec. Member N.Y. Assembly 1816; recorder of N.Y. in 1819–20.

Jay, William, LL.D. (Kenyon, 1858), jurist and philanthropist, b. N.Y. June 16, 1789; d. Bedford, N. Y., Oct. 14, 1858. Y.C. 1807. Son of John. He studied law, but, injuring his eyes, was compelled to relinquish practice, and retired to his large landed estates at Bedford. In 1815 he founded the Bible Society, and, as pres. of the Westchester Bible Society, delivered a long series of annual addresses. He was an early and consistent advocate of the Temperance reform, for the promotion of which he organized a society in 1815. He also took part in the tract, missionary, and educational movements of the day; and was often pres. of the agric. societies of the county. In 1818 he was app. a judge of the C.C.P.; and was first judge of Westchester Co. from 1820 to 1842, when he was superseded on account of his antislavery opinions. He pub. in 1835 "An Inquiry into the Character of the Amer. Colonization and Antislavery Societies," in 1838 "A View of the Action of the Federal Govt. in Behalf of Slavery," in 1849 "Review of the Causes and Consequences of the Mexican war." In 1843–4 he visited Europe, and, with Sir G. Wilkinson, investigated the subject of Egyptian slavery. Judge Jay was for some years pres. of the Amer. Peace Society, and in 1848 pub. "War and Peace; the Evils of the First, with a Plan for suppressing the Last." The committee of foreign relations in the U.S. senate reported in favor of his plan. His numerous publications were widely circulated, and exercised much influence on public opinion. Author of "Life and Writings of John Jay," 2 vols. 8vo, N. Y. 1833. He was an able judge and a skilful controversialist.

Jefferson, JOSEPH, comedian, b. Eng. 1776; d. Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 4, 1832. Son of a disting. actor contemporary with Garrick; came to Boston in 1795; performed there and in N.Y. till 1803, when he went to Phila., where he long remained a favorite at the Chestnut-st. Theatre. He possessed great taste and skill in the construction of intricate stage machinery, and was unrivalled in his peculiar personations. His favorite characters were Kit Cosey, Old D'Oiley, and Admiral Cop.

Jefferson, JOSEPH, comedian, an able exponent of the natural school of personation, b. Phila. Feb. 20, 1829. Grandson of the preceding. His mother was Mrs. Burke, a celebrated vocalist. He appeared very early on the stage, and earned distinction in a great variety of comic parts, from Bob Acres to Caleb Plummer. He has starred in Eng., Australia, and the U.S. Sept. 4, 1865, he opened at the Adelphi, London, in a new version of "Rip Van Winkle," by Dion Boucicault, which he has since performed with great success in the U.S. Though identified with this part, in which he has made his great reputation, his range of characters is very large, and unites the most refined comedy with the broadest farce. His son by his first wife, a Miss Lockyer of N.Y., is said to inherit the family talent. — Brown's Amer. Stage.

Jefferson, THOMAS, LL.D., 3d pres. of the U.S., b. Shadwell, afterward called Monticello, Va., 2 Apr. 1743; d. there 4 July, 1826, on the same day with John Adams, — the 50th anniversary of the Decl. of Indep. Wm. and M. Coll. 1759. Son of Col. Peter (a man of great force of character) and Jane Randolph. He studied law under Judge Wythe; was adm. to the bar in 1767, and was remarkably successful. Jan. 1, 1772, he m. Martha Skelton, a widow of fortune. Member of the House of Burgesses 1769–75. In 1773, with Patrick Henry and others, he devised the celebrated com. of corresp., of which he was a member. In 1774 he published his famous "Summary View of the Rights of British Amer." June 1, 1775, he reported to the Assembly the reply of Va. to Lord North's conciliatory proposition, and, June 21, took his seat in Congress. He was placed on the most important committees; drew up the reply of Congress to Lord North's proposal; and assisted Dickinson in preparing in behalf of the Colonies a declaration of the cause of taking up arms. Made chairman of the com. to draw up a Decl. of Indep., he drafted and reported to Congress, 28 June, that great charter of freedom, which, on July 4, 1776, was unanimously adopted, and signed by every member except John Dickinson of Pa. This, the most important State paper in existence, has exerted, and will continue to exert, a great influence on the destinies of the race, and will remain the immortal monument of its author. In Oct. 1776, Jefferson retired from Congress to take part in the deliberations of the Va. Assembly. For two years and a half he applied himself to a revision of the laws of Va., procuring the repeal of the laws of entail, the abolition of primogeniture, the restoration of the rights of conscience, the prohibition of the future importation of slaves, the establishment of courts of law, and originated a complete system of education. Gov. of Va. from June, 1779, to 1781. Two days after his retirement, his estate at Elk Hill was laid waste; and he and his family narrowly escaped capture. Returned to Congress in 1783, he reported as chairman the definitive treaty of peace with Great Britain. At the succeeding session, he proposed and carried the present decimal system of U.S. coinage, and reported a plan of govt. for the U. S. Territories, introducing the clause which forbade the existence of slavery after the year 1800. In May, 1784, Congress app. him, with Franklin and Adams, minister.-plenipo. to negotiate treaties with foreign powers; and in 1785 he succeeded Dr. Franklin as resident minister at Paris, forming that strong predilection for preference for the French nation over the English that afterward marked his career. He procured the abolition of many monopolies; the admission into France of tobacco, rice, whale-oil, salted fish, and flour; made excursions into Germany and Italy; and displayed marked diplomatic ability. While abroad, he pub. his famous "Notes on Virginia," Paris, 1784. Returning, he left Paris in Sept. 1789, and was app. by Washington sec. of state. The Federal Constitution, recently adopted, did not meet his approval, though he afterward formed a more favorable view of it. With the entrance of Jefferson into the cabinet in Mar. 1790 commenced the struggle between the Republicans under his leadership and the Federalists under that of Hamilton. Jefferson opposed Hamilton's funding system, his U.S. Bank, and other financial measures, and favored aiding France with our arms in her war with Eng.; while Hamilton advocated a strict neutrality. These differences occasioned many stormy discussions in the cabinet, and great political excitement throughout the country; and Jefferson resigned his office 31 Dec. 1793. While sec., he made an able report in Feb. 1791 on the Fisheries; another, in the spring of 1792, upon the Relations of the U.S. with Spain; and in 1793 an elaborate report on Commercial Intercourse with Foreign Nations. Vice-pres. in 1797–1801; pres. 1801–9. His Inaugural Address, delivered at the new Capitol at Washington, Mar. 4, 1801, is unsurpassed among his many great State papers. Among the important events of his administration were the purchase of Louisiana in 1803, our naval victories in the Mediterranean, and peace with Morocco and Tripoli in 1803, Lewis and Clark's exploring exped. to the Pacific in 1804, the trial of Aaron Burr for treason (1807), and the attack, the same year, of the British frigate "Leopard" on the American frigate "Chesapeake," which led to Jefferson's embargo act

Johnson, SIR WILLIAM, gen., b. Warrenton, Co. Down, Ireland, 1715; d. near Johnstown, Fulton Co., N.Y., July 11, 1774. Younger son of Christopher, an Irish gentleman of good family. Educated for mercantile life, an unsuccessful love-affair entirely changed his career. In 1738 he came to Amer. to manage the property of his uncle, Adm. Sir Peter Warren; established himself upon a tract of land on the south side of the Mohawk Valley, ab. 24 miles from Schenectady, N.Y.; and embarked in trade with the Indians, whom he always treated with perfect honesty and justice. By acquainting himself with their language, and accommodating himself to their manners and dress, by his easy, dignified, and affable manner, he won their confidence; acquired over them an influence greater than was ever possessed by any other white man; and was adopted by the Mohawks as one of their tribe, and chosen sachem. At the outbreak of the French war in 1743, Johnson was made sole supt. of the Indians, and preserved the frontier from injury until the peace of Aix la Chapelle in 1748 In 1750 he was app. a member of the Prov. Council. He was instrumental in settling the quarrel which in 1753 arose between the Albany board of commiss. and the Indians, but declined having any thing further to do with Indian affairs. In 1754 he was a delegate to the congress at Albany, and also attended a grand council held with the Indians. Apr. 14, 1755, he was at the council of Alexandria; commiss. by Braddock "sole supt. of the Six Nations;" and created a maj.-gen. and com.-in-chief of the exped. against Crown Point. Sept. 8, 1755, he defeated Baron Dieskau at Lake George. Johnson, who was wounded in the hip, received the thanks of parliament, £5,000, and a baronetcy (Nov. 27, 1755), for his victory. In Mar. 1756, George II. commiss. him "col. agent, and sole supt. of the affairs of the Six Nations and other northern Indians," with a salary of £600. He held this office for the rest of his life. He was engaged with his Indians in the abortive attempts to relieve Oswego and Fort William Henry, and at the repulse of Abercrombie at Ticonderoga in 1758; second in com. of Prideaux's exped. against Fort Niagara in 1759, upon whose death he took the com.-in-chief. He continued the siege with vigor; cut to pieces the French army sent to its relief (July 24); and the garrison surrendered at discretion. With his Indian allies, he partook in 1760 in the exped. of Amherst, which was ended by the capture of Montreal and the surrender of Canada to the British. For his services he received from the king a tract of 100,000 acres of land, north of the Mohawk, long known as "Kingsland," or the "Royal Grant." He gave great attention to agriculture, and first introduced sheep and blood-horses into the Mohawk Valley. He lived in baronial style, and exercised the most unbounded hospitality. By his wife, Catharine Wisenburgh, who d. young, he had John, knighted in 1765, and two daughters, who m. respectively Col. Claus and Col. Guy Johnson. By "Molly," the sister of the great Mohawk sachem Brant, with whom he lived happily till his death, he had 8 children. Sir William was the author of a paper on the "Customs, Manners, and Languages of the Indians," in the Philos. Trans. for Nov. 1772. Life by W. L. Stone, 1865.

Frontenac and Intendant Talon to ascertain the direction and mouth of the Mpi., he started with Marquette and 5 others from Green Bay in June, 1673; ascended the Fox River; and descended the Wisconsin to the Mpi., down which they sailed as far as the Chickasaw country, below the entrance of the Ark. They returned to Green Bay by way of the Illinois River and Lake Michigan, whence Joliet started alone for Quebec, having journeyed 2,500 miles. He lost his journal and other papers in the rapids above Montreal, but wrote out from recollection a narrative which agrees with that of Marquette, and also prepared a map of the region. The French Govt. rewarded his services with the app. of hydrographer to the king and the Island of Anticosti, at the mouth of the St. Lawrence, where he built a house and fort for his family, intending to embark in trade. In 1691 his island was captured by a British fleet, and his property destroyed. The capital of Will Co., Ill., is named after him. Apr. 30, 1697, he obtained a grant of the seigniory of Joliet, south of Quebec, still in the possession of some of his descendants.

Jones, GEN. ALLEN, Revol patriot of Halifax Co., N.C. Chosen brig.-gen. of Halifax dist. in Apr. 1776; delegate to the State Const. Jones, JOHN PAUL, admiral, b. parish of Kirkbean, Scotland, 6 July, 1747; d. Paris, 18 July, 1792. Son of John Paul, a respectable farmer. He went to sea at an early age, and, before he was 18, com. a vessel to the W. Indies. In this employ he continued, until, in suppressing a mutiny, he so wounded one of his seamen as to cause his death. For this he was tried and honorably acquitted in the port in the W. Indies where it occurred; but, on his return to Eng., was so persecuted on account of it, that he went to live in Va., where he had a bro., who in 1773 died, and left him considerable property. Offering his services to Congress, he was made a first lieut. in the navy (22 Dec. 1775), and in gratitude to Gen. Jones of N. Carolina, who had strongly recommended him, assumed his name. After a cruise in "The Alfred," 28, he in Feb. 1776 commanded "The Providence," 12, with which in 6 weeks he took sixteen merchantmen, and destroyed the fishing-establishment at Isle Madame. He fought "The Solebay," 28, for several hours; and on two occasions encountered "The Milford," 32. Capt. Oct. 10, 1776. In "The Alfred" he destroyed the Port-Royal fisheries, and took all the vessels there with their freights. App. 14 June, 1777, to "The Ranger," 18, he sailed to Europe; and Feb. 2, 1778, received from Count D'Orvilliers the first salute ever paid to the American flag by a foreign man-of-war. In April he scaled the walls of the fort at White Haven, and spiked 38 cannon there. His crew having plundered the house of the Earl of Selkirk of his plate, Jones bought it from them, and returned it. While on the English coast, he captured "The Drake," a ship of superior force (sent out expressly to take him), in sight of a large concourse of people, and took her into Brest. The equipment of a squadron which he was to com. detained him in France until Aug. 14, 1779, when he sailed to intercept the Baltic fleet. Owing to the desertion of part of the squadron, and the bad conduct of "The Alliance," he could only capture the convoy, consisting of "The Serapis," 50, and "The Countess of Scarborough," 20. He himself, in the "Bon Homme Richard," encountered "The Serapis," and took her after one of the most severe and sanguinary fights ever recorded. Jones's ship was so severely handled, that she sunk soon after the action. Of her crew of 380, 306 were killed and wounded. He was enthusiastically received in France, receiving from Louis XVI. the order of military merit, and a sword of honor. Congress ordered a gold medal to be struck in honor of his achievements, and app. him to com. "The America," 74. He was doomed to disappointment, however, as Congress found itself called on to present her to France, in lieu of the "Magnifique," lost in our waters. In 1786 Congress made him agent to Denmark and Sweden to obtain indemnity for Jones's prizes delivered from their ports to the enemy. Entering the service of Catharine of Russia as rear-adm. in 1787, in an action against the Turks in the Limau Sea, June 7, 1788, he so disting. himself as to be made vice-admiral, and a knight of St. Ann. Slanderous calumnies, however, acting on an acutely sensitive mind, so imbittered him as to cause him to resign; and he returned to Paris, where he died. The Nat. Assembly decreed him a public funeral and mourning. In his character the tenderness and sensibility of a woman were united to the courage and daring of a hero. The star-spangled banner was first displayed by him on board "The Alfred" in the Delaware. His Life, by John Henry Sherburne, was pub. 8vo, Washington, 1825; by his niece, Miss Janette Taylor, in 1830; and by A. S. Mackenzie in 1845.

Several revised collections of his essays have been made, — "The Analyst, a Collection of Miscellaneous Papers," 1840; "Literary Studies," 2 vols. 1847; "Essays upon Authors and Books," 1849; and "Characters and Criticisms," 2 vols. 1857. He pub. in 1849 a Memorial of his father, David S. Jones, with notices of the Jones family of Queens Co.

Jones, WILLIAM E., maj.-gen. C.S.A., b. Va. 1824; killed Mt. Crawford, Va., June 5, 1864. A.M. of Emory and Henry Coll. 1847. West Point, 1848. Lieut. mounted rifles; resigned 1857. A cavalry officer of ability, serving principally in Western Va.; maj.-gen. in 1863.

Jonquiere, JAQUES PIERRE DE TAFFANEL, Marquis de la, gov. of Canada 1749–52, b. La Jonquiere, France, 1686; d. Quebec, May 17, 1752. He entered the navy in 1698; was adj. in the army in 1703; taken prisoner near Barcelona 1706; was at the siege of Toulon 1707, and the exped. to Rio Janeiro 1711; made Knight of St. Louis and capt. 1731; capt. in the navy 1736; insp. of marine 1741; flag-officer in 1744 of Admiral de Court; accomp. D'Anville's fleet in 1746; app. gov. of Canada in 1747, but was taken by the British, May 3, on his way to that country, where he did not arrive till Aug. 2, 1749. He was tall, well made, of an imposing figure, and excessively brave, but very avaricious. His government was marked with considerable firmness; and he generally carried out the policy of the energetic and talented La Gallissoniere. He solicited a recall in 1751, in consequence of charges of monopoly of the peltry-trade, made by the Jesuits; but his bodily powers gave way before it arrived. He was one of the ablest of the French naval officers. — Morgan.

Jordan, ROBERT, Quaker preacher, b. Nansemond, Va., Oct. 27, 1693; d. Phila. Aug. 5, 1742. He began to preach in 1718; visited N. Kean, John, delegate to Congress from S.C. 1785–7; commiss. to settle accounts between the U.S. and individual States, and cashier of the U.S. Bank; d. Phila. May, 1795.

Keane, John, lord, a British gen., b. Belmont, Ireland, 1781; d. Aug. 24, 1844. He entered the army in 1793; served in Egypt; in the campaign of Martinique and at the siege of Fort Desaix; became lieut.-col. 60th Foot in 1812; com. a brigade in the Peninsular War; was present at the battles of Vittoria, the Pyrenees, Nivelle, Orthes, and Toulouse; attained the rank of maj.-gen. in 1814; and was app. to the com. of the military force destined to co-operate with Admiral Cochrane for the attack on N. Orleans. When Sir E. Pakenham arrived as the gen.-in-chief, Sir John was app. to the com. of the third brigade, and in an assault on the American lines, 8 Jan. 1815, received two severe wounds. Com.-in-chief at Jamaica from 1823 to 1830; at Bombay, from 1833 to 1839; he was then intrusted with the operations in Affghanistan, of which the capture of Ghuznee was his crowning achievement. For this service he was raised to the peerage as Baron Keane in Dec. 1839.

Kearney (kär-ni), Lawrence, commo. U.S.N., b. Perth Amboy, N. J., Nov. 30, 1789; d. there Nov. 29, 1868. Midshipm. July 24, 1807; lieut. Mar. 6, 1813; com. Mar. 3, 1825; capt. Dec. 20, 1832; commo. 1866. He was 1st lieut. of the schooner "Enterprise," when she was wrecked after leaving N. Orleans for a cruise in 1812. His services on the coast of S.C. and adjacent States during the war of 1812 were of great utility. After its close, as com. of "The Enterprise," he performed important services in ridding the W. Indies and the Gulf of Mexico of pirates then infesting them; capturing their vessels, and destroying their strongholds. In com of "The Warren," he cruised in the Levant in 1827; and such was his energy and activity, that the Greek pirates infesting those waters were driven away, their ships destroyed, and their nests broken up. App. to com. the E.I. squad. in 1841, he secured from the Chinese authorities the recognition of our right to trade, and the same protection and facilities to our merchants as were about being granted by treaty to Great Britain. On his return home from China, he stopped at the Sandwich Islands in June, 1843, in time to protest against their transfer to the British crown, without reference to the rights or interests of the U.S. He was afterward a member of the lighthouse board, and of the N. J board of pilot commiss.

City, June 2, 1815; killed in battle near Chantilly, Va., Sept. 1, 1862. Col. Coll. 1833. His great-grandfather, a native of Ireland, settled in Monmouth Co., N. J., in 1716. Bro. of Gen. S. W. Kearny. His mother was the dau. of the philanthropist, John Watts, founder of the Leake and Watts Orphan House. He studied law, but at 22 accepted a lieutenancy in the 1st Dragoons. He was shortly after sent to Europe by the govt. to study and report upon the French cavalry tactics. He entered the Polytechnic School at Saumur; fought in the ranks of the chasseurs d'Afrique as a vol. in Algeria; and returned home in 1840, with the cross of the legion of honor. He became 1st lieut. July, 1839; was aide to Gen. Scott from Dec. 1841 to Apr. 1844; capt. Dec. 1846; served under Gen. Scott through the Mexican campaign, winning the highest distinction by his bravery, and com. his regt. in the Valley of Mexico. He was brev. major for gallantry at Contreras and Churubusco, Aug. 20, 1847. In the attack on the San Antonio Gate of the city of Mexico, he lost his left arm. Ordered to Cal. he com. an exped. against the Indians of the Columbia River; resigned in Oct. 1851, and went to Europe, where he pursued his military studies. During the Italian war of 1859, he served as vol. aide on the staff of the French gen. Maurice; was present at Magenta and Solferino, and received from the emperor a second decoration of the legion of honor. When our civil war broke out, he left Paris; hastened to Washington; was made brig.-gen. of vols. just after the battle of Bull Run, dating from May 17; and com. a brigade of N. Jersey troops in Franklin's division. He was soon after promoted to a division in Gen. Heintzelman's army corps, with which he served through the Peninsular campaign with disting. valor; at Williamsburg he won the day, and at Fair Oaks brought off his division in safety. During the 7-days' battles, he was ordered to leave his sick and wounded. He nevertheless brought off every man of them, and, covering the rear, fought his way through what he considered an ill-judged movement. Made maj.-gen. of vols. July 4, 1862. His division was one of the first to re-enforce Gen. Pope, and was almost constantly engaged in the battles between the Rappahannock and Washington from Aug. 25 to Sept. 1. As a disciplinarian, he excelled; and his troops were enthusiastic in their admiration of his bravery and military ability.

Doctrine on Justification Explained and Vindicated," 1841; "Treatise on Baptism," 1843; and "Vindication of the Catholic Church," in reply to Bishop Hopkins's "End of Controversy Controverted," 1855. The article "Roman Catholic Church," in Appleton's Cyclopædia, was from his pen. He was latterly engaged upon a revised English translation of the Scriptures, intended to supersede the Douay version; and had already pub. the New Testament and several portions of the Old.

Kenrick, PETER RICHARD, D.D., R. C. archbishop of St. Louis, bro. of F. P., b. Dublin, 1806. Educated at Maynooth, where he was prefect. Ord. priest in Ireland, and came to Phila. while his bro. was co-adjutor. Here he had charge of the Catholic Herald; wrote a number of translations and original works; and was made vicar-gen. Nov. 30, 1841, he was consec. bishop of Drasa and co-adjutor of Bishop Rosati of St. Louis, whom he succeeded in 1843. In 1847 he became the first archbishop of that city, the environs of which he has adorned with one of the finest cemeteries in the world. He has pub. "The Holy House of Loretto," "Anglican Ordinations," and some translations.

the first legal writers of his time. In 1836 he wrote and pub., at the request of the common council of New York, a compendious treatise on the city charter and the powers of the municipal officers. The latter part of his life was passed in enlarging and correcting his "Commentaries," and in giving opinions on legal subjects. Made pres. of the N.Y. Hist. Soc. in 1828. His decisions in law and equity are preserved in the Reports of Caines and Johnson. His son WILLIAM, an eminent lawyer (1802–4 Jan. 1861), was some years judge of the N.Y. Circuit Court, and prof. of law at H.U. 1846–7. MOSS KENT, his bro., was M.C. in 1813–17.

Kent, JOSEPH, physician and statesman, b. Calvert Co., Md., Jan. 14, 1779; d. near Bladensburg, Md., Nov. 24, 1837. He was educated as a physician, and combined the practice of his profession with the successful pursuit of agriculture, first in Calvert Co., and after 1806 in Prince George Co. He was an M.C. in 1811–15 and in 1821–6; gov. of Md. in 1826–9; and a U.S. senator in 1833–7.

Kenton, GEN. SIMON, Western pioneer, b. Fauquier Co., Va., April 3, 1755; d. Logan Co., O., April 29, 1836. His father was Irish, his mother Scotch. At the age of 16 he had an affray with a successful rival in love; and, supposing he had killed him, he fled to the wilderness west of the Alleghanies, where, during the conflicts with the Indians in the Revol. war, he performed many daring feats, and was the friend and companion of Boone. He was with Major Clarke at the surprise of Kaskaskia in 1778; was soon after captured by the Indians, and saved from death at their hands by the renegade Simon Girty. Escaping from the British prison at Detroit in July, 1779, he disting. himself during the invasion of Ky. by the British and Indians in that year, leading an active and numerous company from Harrod's Station, who drove out the invaders. After leading a successful exped. against the marauding Indians on the Great Miami, he in July, 1784, settled near Maysville. In 1793–4 he was major, com. a batt. of Ky. vols. under Gen. Wayne. Beggared by lawsuits from a defective land-title, and from losses, in 1802 he became landless; settled on Mad River, Ohio; became a brig.-gen. in 1805; and in 1813 served under Shelby in the battle of the Thames. In 1824 he appeared in Frankfort in tattered garments to petition the legisl. of Ky. to release the claim of the State upon some land owned by him. His appearance at first excited ridicule; but, on being recognized, he was treated with much distinction, and his lands released. Congress subsequently gave him a pension. — Collins's Ky.

Kenyon, WILLIAM ASBURY, a native of Hingham, Ms., who taught school in Illinois, and travelled widely in the Mpi. Valley. Pub. in Jan. 1845 "Miscellaneous Poems," &c., the first vol. of poems printed in Illinois. "Several of them pleasantly satirize backwoods customs, but with more truth than poetry." — Poets and Poetry of the West.

Ker, JOHN, b. Boston, Ms., ab. 1785. Author of "Travels through the U. S. and Mexico in 1808–16," 8vo, Elizabethtown, N.J., 1816. Removed at an early age with his father to London, and educated at Westminster School. Ker found a tribe of Indians near the Red River, from whose language and customs he inferred a Welsh origin, and whom he supposed descended from Madoc, the Welsh prince, who in the 12th century, sailing due west from Wales, discovered an unknown country, and who never returned from his 3d voyage.

Kerfoot, JOHN BARRETT, D.D. (Col. Coll. 1850), LL.D. Rector St. James Coll. Md.; pres. Trin. Coll. 1864–5; consec. bishop of Pittsburg, Jan. 25, 1866.

Kerlerec, gov. of La. Feb. 9, 1753, to June, 1763, when he returned to France, and was thrown into the Bastile, on a charge of peculation. He was a capt. in the French navy; had been 25 years in active service; was in four general engagements; and had received several wounds. — Gayarré.

Kerney, MARTIN J., author and editor, b. Frederick Co., Md., 1819; d. Baltimore, Mar. 16, 1861. After conducting an acad. in Balt., he became a lawyer, and continued in practice till his death. Member of the legisl. of Md. in 1852. He edited the Metropolitan Magazine 4 years; compiled the Catholic Almanac for 1860–1; and wrote a number of school-books, among them a "Compendium of History."

Kershaw, J. B., maj.-gen. Confed. army, b. S.C. Raised the 2d S.C. regt., and disting. at Bull Run. Made brig.-gen. 13 Feb. 1862; maj.-gen. 1864; com. a brigade in McLaw's division, and engaged in the Peninsular battles with McClellan; at the second Bull Run, Antietam, Fredericksburg, and Gettysburg; com. a brig. of Longstreet's corps at Chickamauga; and was in the attack on Knoxville, and the battles of the Wilderness; and surrendered with Lee in Apr. 1865, having com. a division in the corps of Longstreet after Knoxville.

Kertk, ADMIRAL SIR DAVID, com. of a successful exped. against Canada; had been a master-mariner at Dieppe, France, but entered the English naval service in the reign of Charles I. Placed in charge of a formidable force, and accomp. by his two brothers, he arrived at Tadoussac in midsummer, 1628, and after destroying the stores, &c., sent a summons to Champlain to surrender, which was refused. Kertk, thinking Quebec strongly fortified, after capturing a French convoy on its way to Quebec, went home. In July, 1629, he returned, again demanded a surrender; and Champlain, being weaker than ever, capitulated. Kertk, leaving his bro. Lewis in com. of the city, proceeded to Eng., taking Champlain and others with him as prisoners of war. He afterward captured Cape Breton, which was recaptured by Capt. Daniel. These events took place two months after peace had been concluded between France and England, and were not recognized by either nation. As late as 1645 he was on the coast of Newfoundland. — Morgan.

Ketchum, WILLIAM SCOTT, brev. maj.-gen. U.S.A., b. Norwalk, Ct., July 7, 1813; d. by poison, Balt., 28 June, 1871. West Point, 1834. His father, Major Daniel, disting. himself at the battle of Niagara, July 25, 1814; d.

Kettell, Samuel, editor, b. Newburyport, Aug. 5, 1800; d. Malden, Ms., Dec. 3, 1855. Engaging early in literary pursuits, he assisted Mr. Goodrich in preparing the Peter Parley books, one of which he translated into modern Greek while on a voyage to Malta; and it was pub. in that language. He also pub. a coll. of "Specimens of American Poetry," 3 vols. 12mo, 1829; "Personal Narrative of the First Voyage of Columbus," 1827; "Records of the Span. Inquisition," 1828; and many clever papers in the periodicals of the day. Was an accomplished linguist; and, self-taught, mastered, as is said, 14 languages. Having been a frequent contrib. to the Boston Courier, he became principal editor on the retirement of Mr. Buckingham, in 1848, and conducted it with vigor and ability until his death. Member of the legisl. in 1851–3. — Boston Courier, Dec. 8, 1855.

Key, Francis Scott, lawyer and poet, b. Frederick Co., Md., Aug. 1, 1779; d. Baltimore, Jan. 11, 1843. Son of John Ross Key, Revol. officer, who d. Frederick Co., Md., Oct. 12, 1821. Educated at St. John's Coll., and studied law at Annapolis, in the office of his uncle Philip B. Key. In 1801 he commenced practice at Fredericktown, but in a few years removed to Washington, D.C., where he was dist. atty. The "Star-Spangled Banner," our national lyric, was suggested and partially written while the author was detained in the British fleet, during the bombardment of Ft. McHenry, near Baltimore. A posthumous coll. of his miscellaneous poems was pub. N.Y. 1857.

Keyes, Erasmus Darwin, maj.-gen. vols., b. Sturbridge, Ms., May 29, 1811. West Point, 1832. He removed to Kennebec Co., Me., in early youth; entered the 3d Art.; was made 1st lieut. in 1836; assist. adj.-gen. (rank of capt.) in 1838; capt. Nov. 1841; and instr. of art. and cav. at the Milit. Acad. from July, 1844, to Dec. 1848. Afterward ordered to the northwest, he com. a batt. of art., and was highly disting. in the operations against the Indians of Puget's Sound in 1856, and N. of Snake River, Washington Terr. in Sept. 1858; maj. 1st Art. 12 Oct. 1858; and col. 11th Inf. 14 May, 1861. At the battle of Bull Run he com. the 1st brig. in Tyler's division; brig.-gen. of vols. dating from May 17; and in Feb. 1862 took com. of the 4th corps of the Army of the Potomac. He was actively engaged in the battles of the Peninsular campaign; and for gallant conduct was made maj.-gen. of vols. 5 May, and brev. brig.-gen. U.S.A., to date from May 31, the day of the battle of Fair Oaks. He was afterward stationed with a division at Yorktown, Va.; was engaged in an exped. to West Point, Va., 7 May, 1863, and under Gen. Dix towards Richmond, June–July, 1863; resigned 6 May, 1864. — Cullum.

Kidd, William, a noted pirate, executed at Lond. 24 May, 1701. Son of John, a Scottish Nonconformist minister, who suffered torture by the boot, dying 14 Aug. 1679. Wm. followed the sea from his youth; and ab. 1695 was known as one of the boldest and most successful shipmasters that sailed from N.Y. In May, 1691, the N.Y. council awarded him £150 for service to the Colony. Receiving from Wm. III. a commiss. as capt. of "The Adventure," galley of 30 guns, for the suppression of piracy, he sailed from Plymouth, Eng., in Apr. 1696, but, turning pirate himself, returned in 1698 with a large booty to N.Y. The Earl of Bellomont caused him to be arrested, and sent to Eng. for trial. The charge of piracy seems not to have been proved; but, on the charge of having killed one of his crew named Moore, he was convicted after a grossly unfair trial, and hanged. — See Cotton Mather's Brief Relation of Patient and Joyful Sufferings; Hist. Sketch of Robin Hood and Capt. Kidd, by W. W. Campbell, 1853; "Full Account of the Proceedings in Relation to," &c., Lond., 4to, 1701.

Kidder, Daniel Parish, D. D. (McK. Coll. 1851), Meth. minister and author, b. Darien, Genesee Co., N.Y., Oct. 18, 1815. Wesl. U. 1836. Entering the Genesee conf. he was in 1837–40 missionary to Rio de Janeiro, and travelled through Brazil, from San Paulo to the mouth of the Amazon; stationed at Paterson, N.J., in 1841, at Trenton, 1843. App. in 1844 editor of the pubs. of the M. E. Church, and corresp. sec. of the S. S. Union, continuing 12 years; travelled in Europe in 1852–3; prof. of theology in the Garrett Inst., Evanston, Ill., 1856–71. Has pub. King, Austin A., statesman, b. Sullivan Co., Tenn., Sept. 20, 1801; d. St. Louis, Mo., Apr. 22, 1870. He began to practise law in 1822; removed to Mo. in 1830; member of the legisl. in 1834 and 1836; circuit judge of Ray Co. 1837–48; gov. of Mo. 1849–53; again judge of Ray Co. Circuit in 1862, and elected to the 38th Congress. In the Charleston Democ. convention of 1860 he was a prominent Douglas man. He denounced the war for the Union as unnecessary.

King, Charles, LL.D. (H.U. 1850), journalist and scholar, b. N.Y., Mar. 16, 1789; d. Frascate, near Rome, Italy, Sept. 27, 1867. Son of Rufus King, who, while minister at Lond., sent him to Harrow School, and in 1805 to a preparatory school at Paris. On his father's return to the U.S., he was, by advice of Sir Francis Baring, placed in the banking-house of Hope & Co., Amsterdam. At the close of 1806 he returned to his native country. In 1810 he married Eliza, dau. of Archibald Gracie, a leading merchant of N.Y., with whom he was associated in business. Though a Federalist, he deemed it right to prosecute the war of 1812 to an honorable and successful result, and was a member of the N.Y. legisl. in 1813, and a vol. in the autumn of 1814. In 1823 the firm of which he was a member failed; and Mr. King became connected with Verplanck in the publication of the N.Y. American, a political and literary sheet of high character, until 1827; when Verplanck retired, and Mr. King continued sole editor until 1847. He was afterward assoc. in the conduct of the N. Y. Courier and Inquirer from 1845 until 1849, when he was chosen pres. of Col. Coll., which post he resigned in 1864. The independence of his character was strikingly evinced by his earliest public act. Being sent to Eng. by the govt. after the war of 1812, to investigate the treatment of our prisoners at Dartmoor, he did not hesitate to exonerate the British authorities from all censure in the matter in the face of the most intense indignation on the part of the American people, and of what many persons believed the clear and unquestionable facts of the case. Author of "Memoir of the Construction, &c., of the Croton Aqueduct," 4to 1843; "History of the N. Y. Chamber of Commerce," 8vo; "New York Fifty Years Ago;" an Address before the Mechanics' Society, and other hist. addresses.

He was a missionary in S. C. some months, and in Palestine in 1823–6; reached Boston in the fall of 1827, and was employed in the Northern and Middle States. He entered upon the Greek mission in July, 1828; and m. a Greek lady, July 22, 1829. A "Farewell Letter" to his friends on leaving Syria, stating his reasons for not becoming a Roman Catholic, became, with other publications of his in 1852, the basis of a prosecution against him; and he was condemned to 15 days' confinement in a loathsome prison, and to expulsion from Greece. Owing to the vigorous protests of our govt. he was confined but one day, and was not banished. Before 1867, he had translated and printed in modern Greek 5 vols. of the Tract Society's publications. He also pub 4 vols. of his own works in that language.

King, MITCHELL, LL.D. (Char. Coll. and U. of E. Tenn.), judge, b. Scotland, June 8, 1783. He went to Lond. in 1804, and to Charleston, S.C., where he opened a school, in 1806, and soon received a professorship in the coll. of that city. He began to study law in 1807; was one of the founders of the Philos. Society in 1809, before which he delivered lectures on astronomy; and in 1810 was adm. to the bar. He soon disting. himself; prospered in his practice; and became in 1819 judge of the City Court of Charleston. In 1830–2 he was an active member of the Union party, and opposed the doctrine of State nullification. From 1842 to 1844 he was again judge of the City Court; and at different periods he served as delegate in the State convention, and as pres. of the trustees of the Med. chant. He entered the law-office of Theophilus Parsons at Newburyport. In 1778 he was aide-de-camp to Gen. Glover in the expedition against R.I. He commenced practice in 1780; in 1782 was elected to the legisl.; member of the Old Congress 1784–6. He in March, 1785, moved a resolution, "That there be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in any of the States described in the resolution of Congress of April, 1784, otherwise than in punishment of crime; and that this regulation shall be made an article of compact, and remain a fundamental principle of the Constitution." This resolution was, by the votes of 7 States against 4, referred to a com. of the whole, and was almost word for word embodied by Nathan Dane in his famous ordinance of 1787. Mr. King advocated the Constitution, both in the Gen. and State conventions. In 1788 he removed to N.Y., having in 1786 m. the dau. of John Alsop, an opulent merchant of that city. In 1789 he was elected to the N.Y. legisl., by which body Gen. Schuyler and himself were chosen the first senators from the State under the Constitution of the U. S. In 1794, under the signature of "Camillus," he defended the British Treaty. The most celebrated speech made by him in the U.S. senate was in this year, on the right of Albert Gallatin to a seat in senate, which he successfully opposed. In 1796–1804 Mr. King was minister to England, having previously declined the offer of the dept. of state. In 1813 he was a third time sent to the senate by the N. Y. legisl. His speech on the burning of Washington by the British was one of his most eloquent displays, and teemed with sentiments which had echoes from all parties. In 1819 he was re-elected to the senate. He took the lead in opposing the admission of Mo. as a slave State; and several of the laws which he proposed and carried were of great consequence. In 1825 he accepted from Pres. Adams the app. of minister to England, but returned in ill health in 1826.

Ord. pastor of the church in Summer St., Boston, Feb. 5, 1794; and from Nov. 14, 1810, to 1828, was pres. of H.U. His literary productions were widely disseminated through the periodical press. His "Biography of Fisher Ames" ranks as an Amer. classic. He pub. a Eulogy on Washington, Dec. 29, 1799, several occasional sermons, and biographical notices of Dr. Belknap, Gen. Lincoln, and Prof. W. D. Peck. Averse to literary effort, he left nothing which can give an adequate impression of his extraordinary abilities. — See Life by Palfrey, and Obit. Discourses by F. Parkman and A. Young.

Kirkland, SAMUEL, missionary to the Indians, b. Norwich, Ct., Dec. 1, 1744; d. Clinton, Oneida Co., N.Y., Feb. 28, 1808; N. J. Coll. 1765. Son of Rev. Daniel Kirkland of Norwich, and was educated at the school of Rev. E. Wheelock, where he learned the Mohawk language; and he also acquired that of the Senecas by a sojourn among them from Nov. 1764 to May, 1766. Ord. at Lebanon, June 19, 1766. He removed to Ct. ab. 1772, and afterwards lived a while at Stockbridge. After the battle of Lexington, the Prov. Congress of Ms. requested him to use his influence to secure either the friendship or neutrality of the Six Nations. He succeeded in attaching to the patriot cause the Oneidas, with whom he continued his religious labors throughout the war, when the other tribes, through the influence of Brant and the Johnsons, had taken the opposite side. He officiated as chaplain to the Amer. forces in his vicinity, and accomp. Sullivan's exped. in 1779. He was the founder of Ham. Coll., its parent, the Ham. Oneida Acad., having been incorporated through his influence in 1793, at Whitestown, N.Y. In 1789 govt. granted him a tract of land 2 miles square, in the present town of Kirkland, whither he removed. Rev. S. K. Lothrop of Boston, a grandson, has pub. a Memoir of Kirkland in Sparks's "Amer. Biog."

Orders, after alluding to his gallantry and bravery, said he "would have been an honor to any country."

Knox, Gen. Henry, b. Boston, July 25, 1750; d. Thomaston, Me., Oct. 25, 1806. Of Scotch and Irish Presb. stock. His father, who d. when he was very young, came from the Island of St. Eustatius. He possessed a robust and athletic frame, and an enterprising and resolute character. In a shooting-excursion upon the islands, he had the misfortune to mutilate one of his hands. He had a common-school education; became a thriving bookseller; and m. Lucy, dau. of Sec. Flucker, — a lady, who, after the Revol., became a principal ornament of the first social circle in America. Member of an artillery company, and an officer of the city grenadier corps, he availed himself of every opportunity to study his favorite science. He was active as a vol. aide to Gen. Ward at the Bunker's Hill battle, and soon attracted the notice of Washington by his skill as an engineer and artillerist. In Nov. 1775 he was placed in com. of the artillery, and was sent to procure cannon and ordnance-stores from the forts on the Canadian frontier. Early in 1776 he returned, having successfully overcome the difficulties in his way, with a long train of sledges drawn by oxen, bearing more than 50 cannon, mortars, and howitzers, — articles greatly needed for the siege of Boston. Made brig.-gen. Dec. 27, 1776, he com. the art. of the main army during the whole war. Jan. 2, 1777, his well-directed fire repulsed Cornwallis's repeated attempts to cross the Assanpink. He shared in the brilliant action at Princeton, and selected the position of the winter encampment on the high grounds near Morristown. The failure at Germantown was partly due to his too rigid adherence to the military maxim, never to leave an enemy's fort in the rear, causing the pursuit to be abandoned at Chew's garrisoned house. After the fall of Fort Mifflin, Nov. 15, 1777, he was, with De Kalb and St. Clair, sent to provide for the security of Red Bank. He was prominently engaged in the battle of Monmouth, June 28, 1778. Knox sat in the court-martial for the trial of André. He contrib. greatly to the successful result at Yorktown; was made maj.-gen. March 22, 1782; was one of the commissioners to arrange the exchange of prisoners; was efficient in allaying the discontent of the army; was in com. at West Point after the close of hostilities; and arranged the surrender of New York with Sir Guy Carleton. Knox first suggested the Society of the Cincinnati, and was its sec.-gen. while Washington was its pres. He was sec. of war (performing also the duties of sec. of the navy) Mar. 1785 to Dec. 1795; and subsequently removed to Thomaston, Me., where he had a large estate, and exercised a magnificent hospitality. He was frequently a member of the house of representatives and of the council of state. His death was occasioned by having swallowed the bone of a chicken.

Knox, John, captain in the British army; served in N. Amer.; b. Edinburgh; d. Dalkeith, 1790. Pub. an "Historical Journal of the Campaigns in N. Amer. in 1757–60," 2 vols. 4to, London, 1769.

Knox, William, a British politician and author, b. Ireland, 1732; d. Great Ealing, Aug. 25, 1810. App. by Halifax one of his Majesty's council, and provost-marshal of Ga. in 1756, he accomp. Gov. Ellis to that Colony. He returned to Eng. in 1761; and, after the peace, drew up a paper for the Earl of Bute, recommending the creation of a colonial aristocracy, and giving the Colonies representation in the British parliament. He was soon after app. agent for Georgia and East Florida. In 1765 he pub. two pamphlets in defence of the Stamp Act, one entitled "A Letter to a Member of Parliament;" the other, "The Claims of the Colonies to an Exemption from Internal Taxes," &c. His services as agent of that Colony were, in consequence, dispensed with. He pub. in 1768 his principal political work, "The Present State of the Nation," answered by Burke, who was in turn replied to by Knox in 1769. He pub. at the same time "The Controversy between Great Britain and her Colonies renewed," &c. As a reward for his efforts in support of British supremacy, he was app. in 1770 joint under-secretary of state with Pownall. In 1774 he pub. a pamphlet in defence of the "Quebec Act;" and soon after drew up a "Project of a Permanent Union and Settlement with the Colonies," which seems to have served as a basis for Lord North's conciliatory proposition of 1776. He continued under-sec. till 1782, when the office was suppressed. He was still consulted with regard to the remaining Colonies and their trade; and drew up an order in council, July, 1783, utterly excluding Amer. shipping from the West Indies. He submitted the plan for erecting the Province of New Brunswick, in 1784, for the accommodation of the loyalists from the Northern States. He was an agent for prosecuting the claims of the Ga. loyalists for compensation for losses; and had a pension of £600 settled on himself, and a like sum for his wife, as Amer. sufferers. In 1789 he pub. the valuable "Extra-official State Papers." He pub. several other books. — O'Callaghan.

Knyphausen (knip'-hŏw'-zen), Baron William Von, lieut.-gen., 2d in com. of the Hessian troops in the British service in the Revol. war; b. Alsace, 1730; d. Berlin, Prussia, May 2, 1789. Remarkable for taciturnity and reserve, and an excellent officer. His father was col. of a German regt. in the service of the Duke of Marlborough. The gen. commenced his military career in the service of the father of Frederick the Great. He subsequently served in the wars waged by the latter against Austria. He arrived in America in June, 1776, and was engaged in the battle of Long Island in Aug. following; also present at White Plains; aided in the capture of Fort Washington in Nov. 1776; in the battles of Brandywine and Monmouth; com. an exped. to Springfield, N.J.; and in the absence of Sir H. Clinton in June, 1780, was in com. of the city of New York.

Kohl (kōl), Dr. John George, traveller and author, b. Bremen, 28 April, 1808; now (1875) a resident of that city. Educated to the law at Göttingen, Heidelberg, and Munich. Afterward a private tutor in Courland, and traveller in Russia. In 1838 he settled in Kosciuszko (kos-se-us'-ko), Tadeusz, a Polish patriot, b. Lithuania, Feb. 12, 1756; d. Soleure, Switzerland, Oct. 16, 1817. He was of noble descent; was educated at the Milit. Acad. of Warsaw, and (at the expense of the State) in France. On his return to Poland, he was made a capt.; but an unhappy passion for the dau. of the marshal of Lithuania induced him to leave Poland, and offer his services to the Americans. Armed with the recommendation of Franklin, on presenting himself to Washington, he answered his inquiry, "What do you seek here?" by saying, "I come to fight as a volunteer for American independence."—"What can you do?"—"Try me," was the laconic reply. Washington made him an aide-de-camp, and Oct. 18, 1776, col. of engineers. He planned the encampment of Gates at Bemis's Heights, from which Burgoyne found it impossible to dislodge him; and was the principal engineer in executing the works at West Point. In June, 1781, he aided Greene in the unsuccessful siege of Ninety-Six. For his services he received the thanks of Congress, the badge of the Cincinnati, and the brevet of brig.-gen. After the war he returned to Poland, where he fought gallantly under Poniatowski against the Russians, particularly at Zieleuce, June 18, and at Dubienka, July 17, 1792; but the patriots were finally overwhelmed, and Kosciuszko retired to Leipsic. In 1794 another rising of the Poles took place: Kosciuszko was placed at its head, and at Raclawice, April 4, 1794, with 5,000 peasants, armed mostly with scythes, routed a Russian corps of twice that number. He committed the conduct of the govt. to a national council, and marched against his foes. The combined armies of Russia and Prussia, who had attacked Warsaw, were, after several bloody conflicts, compelled by the Polish chief to raise the siege. Austria now added her weight to his enemies, who, with 150,000 men, came upon him, Oct. 10, at Maciejowice. After a long conflict, Kosciuszko, who had repelled 3 attacks, fell covered with wounds, uttering the prophetic lament, "Finis Poloniæ!" He was imprisoned in St. Petersburg until the accession of the Emperor Paul, who, on freeing him, offered him his own sword. "I have no need of a sword," said Kosciuszko: "I have no country to defend." Visiting the U.S. in 1797, he was received with marked distinction, and, in addition to his pension, received from Congress a grant of land. He afterwards resided in France, near Fontainebleau. In 1806 Napoleon sought in vain to engage him in his schemes relative to Poland, Kosciuszko refusing to lend himself to his purposes without a guaranty of Polish freedom. In 1816 he went to live at Soleure, Switzerland. His death was caused by a fall from his horse over a precipice. His remains lie beside those of Poniatowski and Sobieski in the Cathedral Church of Cracow. The cadets at West Point erected an elegant monument to his memory.

Lafayette, Marie Jean Paul Roch Yves Gilbert Motier, marquis de, soldier and statesman, b. at Chavaniac, Auvergne, Sept. 6, 1757; d. Paris, May 19, 1834. One of his ancestors was a distinguished marshal of France: another, Mme. de Lafayette, was one of the most brilliant ornaments of the court of Louis XIV. His father fell in the battle of Minden, and his mother dying in 1770, he was left the heir to an immense estate. He was educated at the college of Pleissis; and at 16 m. a granddaughter of the Duke de Noailles. Entering the army, he was a capt. in a dragoon regt. at Metz, when, in the summer of 1776, hearing that the American Colonies had declared their independence, he at once resolved to aid them: secretly fitted out a vessel; and, with the Baron de Kalb and 10 other officers, set sail, evading the officers sent to prevent his departure. After a long and stormy passage he landed near Georgetown, S.C. His arrival produced a great sensation, and gave a powerful impulse to the patriot cause. He addressed a letter to Congress, asking leave to serve as a volunteer without pay. That body gave him, in consideration of his zeal, illustrious family, and connections, the rank of maj.-gen. July 31, 1777; and he was invited by Washington to become a member of his military family. A volunteer at the battle of Brandywine, Sept. 11, while rallying the retreating Americans, he received a bullet-wound in the leg. App. to command an expedition to Canada by the machinations of the cabal hostile to Washington, he saw through the artifice, and, by Washington's advice, accepted the post; but the plan failed for want of means. On the night of May 19, Gen. Grant undertook to surprise Lafayette at Barren Hill, near Phila., but was foiled. At Monmouth he attacked the British with vigor and success, until Lee ordered him to fall back. Returning home in 1779, he was welcomed there with extraordinary enthusiasm by all classes. It was mainly due to his efforts that the army of Rochambeau was sent to America. May 11, 1780, he rejoined Washington. He was one of the court convened at Tappan, Sept. 29, by whom Maj. André was tried as a spy, and condemned to death. Early in 1781 he was sent with 1,200 men to assist in the defence of Va. From his own funds he supplied shoes, hats, and tents to his destitute army. Pursued by Cornwallis, he skilfully retreated until joined by Wayne's force of 800 men, when he advanced, and placed himself between the British army and large quantities of stores at Charlottesville. Continuing his retreat, Cornwallis at last took post at Yorktown. Lafayette stationed his force so as to cut off the retreat of the British into the Carolinas, and awaited the arrival of Washington and Rochambeau. For his services at the siege of Yorktown, where, in conjunction with Hamilton, he com. one of the assailing parties, he was publicly thanked by Washington on the day after the surrender of Cornwallis. He then returned to France, and was made a maj.-gen. in the French army. Congress, in granting him leave of absence, passed resolutions acknowledging his eminent services. Grand Terre, with all the vessels in port at the time, were taken; but Lafitte and his comrades escaped into the interior, and resumed their operations as soon as Patterson retired. Overtures were, ab. this time, made to Lafitte by the commanders of the British naval and military forces in the gulf, offering him $30,000 and a commission in the British navy, on condition of obtaining his services in conducting the contemplated exped. to N. Orleans. He immediately wrote to Gov. Claiborne of La., enclosing the documents from Capt. Lockyer, and offering his services in defence of La. on the sole condition of pardon to himself and followers for the offences with which they stood charged. Lafitte's offer was, after some hesitation, accepted. In connection with an officer of the army, he was employed in fortifying the passes of Barataria Bay, and rendered efficient service in com. of a party of his followers in the battle of Jan. 8, 1815. His subsequent career is involved in obscurity; but it is believed, that, after the war, he for a time com. a packet plying between Phila. and N. Orleans, and subsequently resumed his old pursuits, taking a privateer's commission either from New Granada or Mexico, and that, while thus engaged, he formed a settlement on the site of the present city of Galveston, which was broken up in 1821 by a naval force under Lieut. Kearney. Lafitte was tall, well-formed, and handsome, easy and polished in manner, and winning and affable in his address. It is supposed that he was of a respectable family, and that his early opportunities for education had been good. — Appleton.

Lafontaine, Sir Louis Hypolite, a Canadian statesman, b. Boucherville, C. E., Oct. 1807; d. Montreal, Feb. 26, 1864. His grandfather, Antoine Menard, was a member of the Canadian parliament from 1796 to 1804. He studied for the bar; became a prominent politician; and being supposed, from his connection with the French Canadian opposition, to be in sympathy with the insurgents of 1837, a reward was offered for his arrest; and he fled to Eng. and thence to France. Subsequently called to the councils of Lord Durham and of Sir Charles Bagot, his party came into power in Mar. 1848; and he was premier from the resignation of Mr. Baldwin until Oct. 1851. Resuming his law-office, he became chief justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, Aug. 13, 1853. Created bart. Aug. 28, 1854. — Morgan.

La Forest, Antoine René Charles Mathurin, comte de, diplomatist, b. Aire, France, 8 Aug. 1756; d. 2 Aug. 1846. Quitting the regt. of Hainaut, he entered the diplomatic service in 1774; was attached in Nov. 1778 to the French legation in the U.S., and was successively vice-consul at Savannah, Phila., and N. York, and in 1785 succeeded Marbois as consul-gen. He returned to France in 1792; was again consul-gen. to the U.S. in 1794–5; was placed at the head of the French post-office after the 18th brumaire; in 1800 was minister-plenipo. to the Congress of Luneville; minister to Berlin 1803–6, and to Spain 1808–13; made peer of France, 3 Mar. 1819; minister of State, and member of the privy council in 1825.

La Hontan, Armand Louis, de Delondarce de, baron, b. near Mont de St. Marsan, Gascony, ab. 1667; d. Hanover, 1715. Frederic West, soldier and explorer, b. Salem, Ms., Dec. 17, 1822; d. Paw Paw, Va., March 2, 1862. As a boy he was remarked for intrepidity, love of adventure, and skill in manly exercises. He studied civil engineering at the Milit. Acad. at Norwich, Vt., and was employed by the govt. to conduct important explorations across the continent. He made two surveys to determine the practicability of a railroad-route to the Pacific, from the second of which, undertaken at his own expense, he alone, of all the party, returned alive. He afterward surveyed and constructed the great overland wagon-route. While engaged in 1858 on this work, his party of 70 men were attacked by the Pah Ute Indians, over whom they gained a decisive victory. When the civil war began in 1861 he was employed on important secret missions in the Southern States; served as a vol. aide on Gen. McClellan's staff; and participated with great credit in the capture of Philippi and the battle of Rich Mountain. Made a brig.-gen. May 17, and in July took an important command on the Upper Potomac. Hearing of the disaster at Ball's Bluff, he hastened to Edward's Ferry, which he held with a single company of sharpshooters, but was severely wounded in the leg. Before the wound was healed he reported for duty, and at Hancock, Jan. 5, 1862, he repulsed a greatly superior Confed. force which besieged the town. Though much debilitated by his wound, he particularly disting. himself by a brilliant dash upon the enemy at Blooming Gap, Feb. 14, 1862, for which he received a special letter of thanks from the secretary of war. Increasing ill health compelled him to apply for temporary relief from military duty; but, while preparing an attack on the enemy, Mar. 1, he died suddenly of congestion of the brain. In 1860 he m. Larned, SYLVESTER, Presb. clergyman, b. Pittsfield, Ms., Aug. 31, 1796; d. N. Orleans, Aug. 31, 1820. Mid. Coll. 1813. Son of Col. Simon. He studied theology at Princeton; ord. in July, 1817. In the following autumn he proceeded to N. Orleans, by way of Detroit, Louisville, and the Mpi. River, preaching with rare eloquence on his way, and making such a powerful impression in that city, that a church was soon organized, over which he was settled; but in the summer of 1820 he was carried off by the yellow-fever. A memoir of his life, with a coll. of his sermons, was pub. in 1844 by Rev. R. R. Gurley.

Lartigue, JAMES, D.D., R.C. bishop of Montreal, b. there June 20, 1777; d. Apr. 19, 1840. Consec. Jan. 21, 1821. Feb. 1, 1820, made suffragan of Quebec, and bishop of Felmessa in Lycia. He took a vigorous stand in 1837 against Papineau and the revolutionists.

La Salle, ROBERT CAVELIER, sieur de, a French explorer, bap. Rouen, 22 Nov. 1643; d. Texas, Mar. 20, 1687. He renounced his inheritance by joining the Jesuits, but, obtaining his discharge, ab. 1667 embarked for Canada. As a fur-trader at La Chine (which he so named from a cherished project of seeking by way of Canada a passage to China), he explored Lake Ontario, visited the neighboring Indians, established posts on the upper waters of the St. Lawrence, and was intrusted by Gov. Frontenac with the fort where the city of Kingston now stands. On returning to France in 1675, he obtained the rank of nobility, and the grant of a large domain around Fort Frontenac, and of the exclusive traffic with the Five Nations. He returned from another visit to France, July 14, 1678, with 30 mechanics and mariners; established a trading-house at Niagara, and Aug. 7, 1679, embarked with his colony in "The Griffin" 60 tons, on the Niagara River, for the valley of the Mpi. Reaching Green Bay Sept. 2, he sent back his bark with a cargo of rich furs, with orders to return immediately. Proceeding with his company in canoes, he formed an alliance with the Illinois Indians on the banks of Lake Peoria, 1,500 miles from the nearest French settlement, and built a fort, which, on account of his anxiety for "The Griffin," and the discontent of his company, he named Crèvecœur (heart-break). In March, 1680, he returned on foot to Frontenac, and learned of the shipwreck of "The Griffin," and of another ship, which had been despatched with resources for him from France. Collecting his scattered followers, Feb. 6, 1682, he descended the Illinois to its junction with the Mpi. He built a fort near the mouth of the Ohio, and a cabin on the first Chickasaw bluff; raised the cross by the Arkansas; planted the arms of France near the Gulf of Mexico; took possession, in the name of France, of the whole valley; and, Apr. 9, entered the Gulf of Mexico, founded the fort of St. Louis, and gave to the adjacent lands the name of Louisiana. He returned to Quebec in Nov. 1683, and embarked for France, where he received a commission placing the country from Fort St. Louis to New Biscay under his control. An exped. for the colonization of La. with 4 vessels and 280 persons left Rochefort Aug. 1, 1684; but dissensions at once arose between La Salle and the naval com. Beaujeu. Missing the mouth of the Mpi. he disembarked in Matagorda Bay, losing most of his munitions in a gale. Sickness and other causes having reduced their number to 37, he determined, Jan. 12, 1687, to seek by land the Illinois country, and thence to pass to Canada. He set out with 16 men, and reached a branch of the Trinity River. Here the malignity of two men, Duhaut and l'Archevêque, who had embarked their capital in the enterprise, found opportunity for gratification. They quarrelled with and murdered his nephew, and from an ambush shot La Salle

Circuit Court in 1848–50; removed to Cal.; was clerk of the recorder's court of San Francisco; dist.-atty. of Sacramento and El Dorado counties in 1850–1; M.C. 1853–5; collector of San Francisco 1855–7; gov. of Cal. in 1860; U.S. senator 1861–7.

Lathrop, JOHN, D.D. (H.U. 1768; Edinb. 1785), A.A.S., minister of Boston, b. Norwich, Ct., May 17, 1740; d. Boston, Jan. 4, 1816. N.J. Coll. 1763. Great-grandson of John, minister of Scituate and Barnstable 1634–53. He assisted Wheelock in his Indian school at Lebanon, and was ord. May 18, 1768, at the Old North Church, Boston. In 1779, his society having united with Dr. Pemberton's, he became pastor of the Second Church. He was an officer of many literary and charitable societies, and pub. some occasional sermons.

Lathrop, JOHN, poet, b. Boston, Jan. 13, 1772; d. Georgetown, D.C., Jan. 30, 1820. H.U. 1789. Son of the preceding. He established himself in the practice of law at Dedham, Ms., in 1797, but soon located himself in Boston, where he found congenial spirits in Paine, Prentiss, and other poets and wits of the day, contributing with them to the Federal Boston Gazette. The indulgence of his literary tastes interfered with his success in the law; and in 1799, in the hope of improving his fortunes, he went to India. He established a school in Calcutta, and contrib. to the papers. Returning in 1809, when politics ran high, his plan of establishing a literary journal was necessarily abandoned. He taught a school in Boston several years; wrote for the papers; lectured on natural philos., and furnished songs and orations for festive and Masonic occasions. Removing to the South, he continued his prof. of instructor, lecturer, and newspaper-writer in Washington and Georgetown, D.C., and obtained a situation in the post-office, which his shattered health did not long permit him to occupy. He pub. an oration, July 4, 1796, at Boston, another at Dedham, 4 July, 1798; a Masonic address at Charlestown, June 24, 1811; "Speech of Canonicus," a poem, Calcutta, 1802, and Boston, 1803; "Pocket Register and Freemason's Anthology," 1813.

Adm. to the bar in 1826; he was connected with the Norwich Military Acad. in 1827; was principal of the Gardiner, Me., Lyceum two years; was prof. of math. and nat. philos. in Ham. Coll. in 1829–35, and of law, history, polit. econ., and civil polity from 1835 to 1840; pres. of the U. of Mo. from 1840 to Sept. 1849; chancellor of the U. of Wis. from Oct. 1849 to 1859; pres. of the Ind. U. in 1859–60; prof. of English Lit. in the U. of Columbia, Mo., in 1860–2; and from 1865 till his death pres. of that institution. — Y. C. Ob. Record.

Lathrop, JOSEPH, D.D. (Y.C. 1791), clergyman, b. Norwich, Ct., Oct. 20, 1731; d. W. Springfield, Ms., Dec. 31, 1820. Y.C. 1754. While engaged in teaching school at Springfield, he studied theology; was licensed, and Aug. 25, 1756, ord. pastor of the Cong. church in W. Springfield, where he continued to preach until, in Mar. 1818, he received a colleague. For nearly 3 years ill health kept him from the pulpit; and an impostor named John Watkins intruded into his parish, causing such disturbance as led him to preach his celebrated sermons, entitled "Wolves in Sheep's Clothing," which have been widely circulated here and in Great Britain. In 1792 he was elected a fellow of the Acad. of Arts and Sciences; in 1793 he declined an invitation to the chair of divinity in Y.C. His sermons were simple, clear, and original. On account of his great reputation for practical wisdom, he was often called upon to settle eccles. difficulties. His works in 7 vols. contain his Autobiography and pulpit discourses. He pub. "A Miscellaneous Collection of Original Pieces," &c., 1786.

Lathrop, CAPT. THOMAS; killed in battle with the Indians near Deerfield, Ms., Sept. 18, 1675, in Philip's war. He was a freeman of Salem 1634; repres. 1647, '53, and '64; removed to Beverly, and founded a church there, and was representative 4 years.

Laudonniere, René Goulaine de, a French explorer of Florida. Adm. Coligny, having in 1551 formed the design of founding a Protestant colony in Amer., sent from Dieppe (15 Feb. 1562), an exped. under Ribault and Laudonniere, whose first settlement at Port Royal was, after their return to France, abandoned by the colonists. Apr. 22, 1564, Laudonniere sailed with 3 ships with assistance for the colony. He landed at the harbor now known as St. Augustine; afterwards coasted to the north; and, entering the River St. John's, called by him the River Mary, built Fort Caroline on its banks. Sept. 20, 1565, the Spaniards, under Menendez, entered the fort at daybreak, and put the garrison to the sword. A few escaped by flight, among them Laudonnière, whose account of the affair is in Hakluyt. — See also his Hist. Notable de la Floride, &c., Paris, 1586.

Launitz, Robert E., sculptor, b. Russia, 1805; d. N. Y. City, 12 Dec. 1870. He came to the U. S. in 1820, and was at one time quartermaster and capt. of engineers in the 7th N. Y. regt. Among his works are the Pulaski Monument, Savannah, Ga., and the statue of Gen. Thomas, now in Troy; also many fine monuments in Greenwood Cemetery.

Laurens, Henry, statesman, b. Charleston, S.C., 1724; d. there Dec. 8, 1792. His ancestors were Huguenots. After receiving a good education, he was sent to London to fit himself for commercial pursuits. On his return he entered into business, and, by his industry and activity, acquired an ample fortune. A sturdy opponent of the abuses of power, his contests with the crown judges were frequent, especially in respect to their arbitrary decisions in marine law and the Courts of Admiralty; and his pamphlets gave remarkable proof of legal ability. He held a commission in one of the Cherokee campaigns, and left a diary of the exped. in MS. Having retired from business, he went in 1771 to Europe in order to superintend the education of his sons, and made the tour of Great Britain. With several other Americans, he endeavored in 1774 by petition to dissuade parliament from passing the Boston Port Bill, and exerted himself to prevent a war. He arrived in Charleston in Dec. 1774; was chosen pres. of the council of safety and of the Prov. Congress, and in 1776 a delegate to the Gen. Congress; and was pres. of that body 1 Nov. 1777–10 Dec. 1778. In 1779 he received the app. of minister-plenipo. to Holland. On his way he was captured by the British, carried to Lond., and committed to the Tower, where he was closely confined for more than 14 months. In Dec. 1781 he was app. by Congress one of the commis. to negotiate a peace; and, having repaired to Paris, he signed (Nov. 30, 1782), with Franklin and Jay, the preliminaries of the treaty. His health had been broken by his imprisonment; and he passed the remaining years of his life in quiet pursuits. A portrait painted in his youth, and his letters edited by [illegible] left numerous original MSS., a portion of which have been published by the S. C. Hist. Society.

number of times; subsequently became one of the foremost men in building up American manufactures, and the flourishing city of Lawrence was the offspring of his enterprise. He was from an early period of his life a zealous advocate of the protective system. In 1827 he was a delegate to the Harrisburg convention, to consider the manufacturing interests of the country; in 1831 served in the common council of Boston; M.C. 1835–7 and 1839–41; in 1842 he was app. a commiss. to arrange the north-eastern boundary question; minister to Eng. 1849–Oct. 1852. He founded the Lawrence Scientific School in Cambridge, to which he gave $100,000. He established prizes for the deserving scholars of the public schools, and always gave generously to churches and to religious and charitable associations. His son TIMOTHY BIGELOW, b. Boston, 23 Nov. 1826. H.U. 1846. Attaché at London 1849–55; consul-gen. to Italy from 1862 to his d. at Washington, 21 Mar. 1869.

Lawrence, AMOS, a philanthropic merchant of Boston, b. Groton, Ms., Apr. 20, 1786; d. Boston, Dec. 31, 1852. After an academic education in his native town, he commenced business in Boston in 1807; formed a partnership with his bro. Abbott under the firm of A. and A. Lawrence, Jan. 1, 1814, and for 39 years was a leading member of the mercantile community, acquiring a large fortune, which he employed in many acts of unsurpassed liberality. Besides his constant private charities, he gave munificently to the cause of education and religion. To Wms. Coll. he gave at different times an aggregate of near $40,000. The acad. at Groton was also liberally assisted by him. To the fund for the erection of Bunker-hill Monument he contributed at one time $10,000, and sums at other times to nearly or quite an equal amount. His personal exertions did much towards awakening the spirit which secured its completion. He was in 1821 a member of the State legisl. Mr. Lawrence was imbued with the true spirit of Christian benevolence. Modest and unassuming in his deportment, his immense charities, which in the aggregate amounted to several hundreds of thousands of dollars, were noiselessly dispensed. "Extracts from the Diary and Correspondence of Amos Lawrence," with a memoir by his son, W. R. Lawrence, was pub. 1855.

Lawrence, CHARLES, a British gen.; d. Halifax, N.S., Oct. 19, 1760. Made a member of the council of N.S. July 31, 1749; being then a major in the army. In the spring of 1750 he was sent to reduce the French at Chignecto; but they burned their town, and retired to the woods; in the course of the summer he returned to the attack, and erected a fort at the head of the Bay of Fundy, called Fort Lawrence. On the retirement of Gov. Hopson in 1753 he administered the govt.; was app. lieut.-gov. 1754, and gov. in 1756. In Sept. 1757 he was app. a col. com. of the 60th regt., and brig. in Amer. Dec. 31. In Loudon's campaign of 1757 he com. the reserve, and at the siege of Louisburg, in 1758, the 2d brigade.

Lay, BENJAMIN, a benevolent and eccentric Quaker, b. Eng. 1681; d. Abington, Pa., 1760. Bred to the sea. He settled in Barbadoes ab. 1710; but became obnoxious to the inhabitants by his condemnation of slave-owning; left the island, and settled at Abington, near Phila. In 1737 he wrote a treatise entitled "All Slave-Keepers that keep the Innocent in Bondage Apostates." It was printed by Franklin, who told the author that it was deficient in arrangement. "It is no matter," said Mr. Lay, "print any part thou pleasest first." Temperate in his diet, he declaimed against the introduction of tea as a pernicious herb. He distributed religious books as prizes to schoolchildren, also imparting to them advice and instruction. All his clothes were manufactured by himself. His bold, determined, and uniform reprehension of slavery, in defiance of public opinion, does him the highest honor. — See Rush's Essays, and Wharton's Notes on the Lit. of Pa.

He entered the engr. corps in 1818, but resigned Aug. 20, 1831, having attained the rank of major. His principal publications are, "Monographs of the N. American Species of Utricularia, Gratiola, and Ruellia;" "Observations of the N. American Species of Viola;" "Descriptions of the Species of N. American Tortoise" (in "Annals of N.Y. Lyceum of Nat. Hist."); "A Monography of N. American Histeroides" (Boston Journal of Nat. Hist.); "Descriptions of Three New Species of Auricula, with Remarks upon other N. American Rodents" (Proceedings of Phila. Acad. of Nat. Sciences). He was vice-pres. of the Amer. Acad. of Nat. Sciences, and had a high reputation for accuracy as a naturalist.

Le Conte, JOHN LAWRENCE, naturalist, son of the preceding, b. N.Y. May 13, 1825. N.Y. Coll. Phys. and Surg. 1846. He made scientific journeys to Lake Superior and the Upper Mpi. in 1844, to the Rocky Mountains in 1845, and to Lake Superior again in 1846. In 1848 he made a third journey to this lake, in company with Agassiz and others, and contrib. the account of the coleoptera to the vol. giving the results of the exped. In 1849–51 he was in Cal., and explored the Colorado River. He has contrib. many papers, chiefly on coleopterous insects, to the Transactions of various learned societies and to the Smithsonian "Contributions to Knowledge." — Appleton.

Le Conte, JOSEPH, M.D., naturalist and physician, b. Liberty Co., Ga., 1823. In 1851 he accomp. Prof. Agassiz on a scientific tour to Fla.; and in 1856 became prof. of chemistry and geology in S.C. Coll. He has pub. several chemical and geological works.

Lederer, JOHN, the first explorer of the Alleghanies, wrote in Latin an account of his "Three Several Marches from Va. to the West of Carolina, and Other Parts of the Continent, begun in March, 1669, and ended in Sept. 1670," translated by Sir William Talbot, and pub. in Lond. 1672. — Duyckinck.

Ledyard, JOHN, traveller, b. Groton, Ct., 1751; d. Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 17, 1789. He passed some time at Dartm. Coll. to fit himself for a missionary to the Indians, and spent several months among the tribes of the Six Nations, but, impelled by a restless spirit of adventure, shipped at N. London as a common sailor, and, being in London when Cook was starting on his last voyage around the world, embarked with him as a corporal of marines. He kept a journal of this voyage, a brief sketch of which was pub. in Hartford in 1783. He made several fruitless efforts to set on foot a trading exped. to the N.W. coast, and went to Europe in June, 1784. He then undertook a journey through Northern Europe and Asia, and across Behring's Straits to the western hemisphere. Sir Joseph Banks and others gave him a small supply of money; and in the latter part of 1786 he departed. Arriving at Stockholm, he walked around the whole coast of the Gulf of Bothnia, reaching St. Petersburg in the latter part of March, 1787, without money, shoes, or stockings. This journey, of upward of 1,400 miles, took less than 7 weeks. Proceeding on his way to Siberia, he was arrested at Irkootsk, Feb. 24, 1788, by order of the empress, conducted to the frontier of Poland, and dismissed with an intimation that he would be hanged if he re-entered Russia. This arrest is supposed to have been caused by the jealousy of the Russian-American Trading Company. Ledyard found his way back to London, "disappointed, ragged, and penniless," and at once accepted an offer to explore the interior of Africa. Leaving Eng. in the latter part of June, he was attacked at Cairo by a bilious disorder, which put an end to his life. For capacity, endurance, and resolution, he was most remarkable. He said of himself, "I have known both hunger and nakedness to the utmost extremity of human suffering. I have known what it was to have food given me as charity to a madman; and I have at times been obliged to shelter myself under the miseries of that character to avoid a heavier calamity." Some of his manuscripts were printed in London a few years after his death in the Memoirs of the Society instituted for encouraging Discoveries in the Interior of Africa. Many extracts from his journal, and his private corresp. with Jefferson and others, are given in Sparks's "Life of Ledyard."

Ledyard, WILLIAM, col. in the Revol. army, b. Groton, Ct., 1738; d. Sept. 6, 1781. Uncle of the preceding. During the marauding exped. of Arnold along the coast of Ct., Col. L. with 157 militiamen, hastily collected, threw himself into Fort Griswold, opposite N. London, when it was attacked by the British colonel, Eyre, with 800 men. After a brave resistance, and a loss of 200 men inflicted on the enemy, the work was carried by assault, and its gallant defenders put to the sword. The Tory major, Bromfield, on receiving Ledyard's sword, deliberately ran him through the body, killing him on the spot. A monument commemorates the event and locality. His widow d. Phila. Nov. 8, 1848, a. 90.

Lee, ALFRED, D.D. (Trin. Coll. 1841), Prot.-Ep. bishop of Del., b. Cambridge, Ms., Sept. 9, 1807. H.U. 1827. Quakers in this country, b. Manchester, Eng., Feb. 29, 1736; d. Watervliet, N.Y., Sept. 8, 1784. She was employed in a cotton-factory, and afterwards as a cook in the Manchester Infirmary; m. a blacksmith named Stanley; and in 1758 joined the small society formed by James and Jane Wardley, Quakers, the originators of the sect of Shakers in Eng. Ab. 1770 she began to testify against the wickedness of marriage as "the root of human depravity," and was confined for several weeks in a madhouse. She came with some of her followers to New York in 1774; and in the spring of 1776 established herself at Watervliet, near Albany, at which time she became their recognized head. She was charged with witchcraft, and, being opposed to war, was accused of secret corresp. with the British. A charge of high treason was preferred against her, and she was imprisoned at Albany and in the Poughkeepsie jail until her release by Gov. Clinton in 1777. Returning to Watervliet, her followers greatly increased. In 1780, during a religious revival in New Lebanon and several adjoining towns, under the influence of Ann Lee, many persons were converted to the doctrines of the Shakers. In this movement originated the flourishing society at New Lebanon. In 1781–3 Ann Lee, and the elders of the society at Watervliet, made a missionary journey through N.E., in the course of which societies were founded in Harvard, Ms., and other places. So great were the spiritual gifts she was believed to possess, that she was acknowledged a spiritual mother in Christ. Hence her name of "Mother Ann." —See Millennial Church pub. by the Shakers.

Lee, Arthur, LL.D. (H.U. 1789), diplomatist of the Revol., the youngest of 6 disting. brothers, b. Westmoreland Co., Va., 20 Dec. 1740; d. 14 Dec. 1792. Educated at Eton and the U. of Edinburgh, he took the degree of M.D. in 1765; made the tour of Europe; and, returning to Va., practised at Williamsburg with success. Determining to be a lawyer, he went to Eng. to study the profession in 1766; joined the society of supporters of the bill of rights; engaged in a literary controversy with "Junius," and, under the signature of "Junius Americanus," wrote political articles that gained him the acquaintance of Johnson, Burke, Dr. Price, and other eminent men. In 1769 he pub. "The Monitor's Letters," in vindication of colonial rights. Adm. to the bar in 1770, and app. by the Ms. Assembly agent, in case of the absence or death of Dr. Franklin, he co-operated with him, and received in 1784, for his services to the State, 4,000 acres of land. In 1774 he pub. at Paris "An Appeal to the People of Great Britain," which was ascribed to Lord Chatham. Appointed in Nov. 1775 the London correspondent of Congress. In Aug. 1775 he presented the second petition of Congress to the king. App. in Sept. 1776 one of the commiss. to France, and at the same time agent for Va., he succeeded in procuring for that State, from the royal arsenals, warlike stores to the value of nearly £260,000. In May, 1777, Congress app. him sole commiss. to Spain, still retaining him on the French commiss. He presented to the Spanish Govt. an eloquent memoir on "The Present State of the Dispute between America and Great Britain," and finally procured a large money loan. He next went to Berlin, where he was permitted to reside in a private capacity, and to correspond secretly with the court, from whom he received friendly assurances. Discord arising between Lee and the other commissioners, factions were created in Congress which endangered the cause; and Lee became the bitter enemy of Franklin, whom he falsely charged with connivance at fraud and corruption, and with being under French influence. Lee was envious of the superiority of Franklin, whom he persistently libelled in his letters to Congress. When, in 1779, it was determined to send a minister to Spain, Lee, though nominated, was not app. He then resigned; returned home in Aug. 1780; communicated his views to Congress; and also pub. "Extracts from a Letter to Congress in Answer to a Libel by Silas Deane," Deane in a published address having charged Lee with obstructing the alliance with France, and disclosing the secrets of Congress to British noblemen. Member of the Va. Assembly in 1781; member of Congress in 1782–5; delegate to treat with the northern Indians in 1784; and member of the treasury board in 1785–9, whence he retired to a farm on the Rappahannock. He was a pure patriot; a man of polite manners, but of strong passions, and a jealous and melancholy temperament. His "Life and Corresp." was pub. by his grand-nephew, R. H. Lee, 2 vols. 1829.

Lee, Charles, maj.-gen. Revol. army, b. Dernhall, Cheshire, Eng., 1731; d. Phila. 2 Oct. 1782. Son of Col. John Lee. Entering the army at an early age, he came in 1754 to Amer.; served under Braddock in the disastrous defeat of the Monongahela, and, in com. of a comp. of grenadiers, was wounded in the unsuccessful assault on Ticonderoga. He dwelt for a time with the Mohawk Indians, who made him a chief, and named him in their language "Boiling Water." In 1762 he disting. himself in Portugal under Burgoyne; in 1768 the King of Poland app. him a maj.-gen., but he soon returned to Eng.; and in 1772 was made a lieut.-col., and placed on half-pay. He wrote on the side of the Americans in their dispute with the British ministry, with whom he became still more imbittered on failing to obtain promotion. After some years of travel in Europe, he killed an Italian officer in a duel, and in the summer of 1773 came to New York. He travelled through the Colonies, encouraging the Americans to resist, and purchased land in Berkeley Co., Va. Made maj.-gen. 17 June, 1775, by Congress, he resigned his commiss. in the British service, accomp. Washington to Boston, and in Feb. 1776 took charge of the defence of N. York. Sent soon after, as com.-in-chief of the southern dept. to the Carolinas, he infused order and confidence everywhere, and received a great accession of military reputation from the successful defence of Fort Moultrie, to which, however, he contributed very slightly. He then visited Ga., which he assisted in fortifying, and returned north in season to procure the withdrawal of the army from a position of great hazard.

Lee, GEN. HENRY, soldier, and gov. of Va. 1791–4, b. Westmoreland Co., Va., Jan. 29, 1756; d. Cumberland Island, Ga., Mar. 25, 1818. N.J. Coll. 1773. Henry his father was first cousin of R. H. Lee. His mother was Mary, dau. of Col. Bland of Jordans. In 1776 he was app. a capt. in Bland's Cav.; and in Sept. 1777 joined the main army. By the strict discipline he introduced, he was enabled to move with celerity and effect; and his rapid and daring system of tactics made "Lee's Legion" highly efficient. Washington selected his company for his body-guard at the battle of Germantown. In Jan. 1778, Lee, with only 10 men, was attacked in a stone house by 200 British troopers, whom he beat off. He was soon after made a major, with the com. of an independent corps of 2 companies of horse, afterward increased to 3, and a body of inf. July 19, 1779, he surprised the garrison of Paulus Hook, and took 160 prisoners. For his "prudence, address, and bravery" in this affair, Congress voted him a gold medal. Made lieut.-col. Nov. 6, 1780, he joined Greene's southern army in Jan. 1781. During the famous retreat of Greene before Cornwallis, Lee's Legion formed the rear-guard. While watching the movements of Cornwallis in N.C., he fell upon the Tory Col. Pyle, who was leading 400 men to Cornwallis, killing and capturing most of his command. At the battle of Guilford, Lee encountered Tarleton, and drove him back with loss; afterward held his ground obstinately on Greene's left wing; and finally covered the retreat. It was by Lee's advice, that Greene adopted the daring policy of not following Cornwallis into Va., but of leaving that province to its fate, and marching south to end the conflict in S.C. and Ga. The result fully vindicated the expediency of this policy. Lee with his Legion joined the partisan force under Marion, and, by a series of vigorous operations, reduced Forts Watson, Motte, and Granby. While on his way to join Col. Pickens, he surprised and took Fort Galphin. Augusta was taken after a siege of 16 days. He was also at the unsuccessful siege of Ninety-six. At Eutaw his gallantry contributed greatly to the successful result; Lee's impetuous charge, causing the retreat of the British left wing, probably saved the army from defeat. Lee soon after retired from the service; settled down at Stratford; and was soon after m. to his cousin Matilda, dau. of Philip Ludwell Lee. His second wife was Anne, dau. of Charles Carter. In 1786 he was a delegate to Congress; and in the Va. conv. of 1788 was a prominent advocate of the Federal Const. He afterwards served in the Va. house of delegates. App. to com. the force raised to quell the Whiskey Insurrection in 1794, his advance at the head of 15,000 men speedily stopped all resistance. In 1799 he was again in Congress, where he delivered the eulogy on Washington, in which occurs the celebrated phrase "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen." While confined for debt he wrote, in 1809, his "Memoirs of the War in the Southern Dept. of the U.S." In 1814 he was in Baltimore when the riots connected with the Federal Republican, newspaper, occurred, and received, in resisting the mob, injuries from which he never recovered. Lee was above the medium height, and well-proportioned. Of his military talents Greene said, "No man in the progress of the southern campaign had equal merit with Lee." The "love and thanks" expressed to Lee in Washington's letter in 1789 show the affection which his generous qualities had inspired.

Lee, HENRY, author, son of Gen. Henry, b. Stratford, Westmoreland Co., Va., 1787; d. Paris, Jan. 30, 1837. Wm. and Mary Coll. 1808. App. major 36th Inf. Apr. 8, 1813; aide-de-camp to Gen. Wilkinson, and afterward of Gen. Izard on the Canadian frontier. After the war he m. Miss Ann McCarty, whose estate adjoined his own. In 1824 he pub. "Campaign of 1781 in the Carolinas," an answer to the strictures in Johnson's "Life of Greene," on his father and the Legion. Though a Federalist, he advocated in a series of essays the election of Gen. Jackson, who in 1829 app. him consul at Algiers; but, not having been confirmed by the senate, he returned within a year. The first vol. of his "Life of Napoleon" appeared at Paris and N.Y. in 1835; and after his death, this, with the additional matter he had prepared, was pub. in Lond. and Paris, bringing the history down to the close of the first Italian campaign. In 1832 he again vindicated his father's fame in his "Observations on the Writings of Thomas Jefferson," repub. in 1845, with additional notes by C. C. Lee. — Duyckinck.

His speech on introducing this bold measure was one of the most brilliant displays of eloquence ever heard. He left Congress in June, 1777; was again a member in Aug. 1778–80, 1784–5, and 1786–7. In 1780–4 he served in the Assembly, and, at the head of the militia of his county, protected it from the incursions of the British. In 1784 he was chosen pres. of Congress by a unanimous vote, but retired at the end of the year; and in 1786 and '87 was again in the Va. Assembly. In 1792 ill health forced him to retire from public life, when be was again honored by the Va. legisl. with a vote of thanks. Strongly opposed to the Federal Constitution, which he regarded as a consolidation of political powers which would tend to destroy the independence of the State govts., he contended for the necessity of amendments to it previously to its adoption in 1789; and was a senator from Va. from 1789 to 1792, supporting the administration of Washington. Author of a number of political pamphlets; and his correspondence, with a Memoir, was pub. by his grandson R. H. Lee, in 1825, 2 vols. 8vo.

West Point, 1829 (second in his class). His mother was Anne Carter. Entering the engineers, he was made capt. 7 July, 1838; was chief engr. of Wool's brigade in the Mexican war; and earned the brevets of maj., lieut.-col., and col. for Cerro Gordo, Contreras, and Churubusco, and at Chapultepec, where he was wounded. His services as an engineer at Vera Cruz, and the subsequent operations in Mexico, were highly eulogized by Gen. Scott. Supt. Milit. Acad. Sept. 1, 1852–Mar. 3. 1855, when he was made lieut.-col. 2d Cav.; col. 1st Cav. Mar 16, 1861. App. Apr. 22 to com. the forces of the seceding State of Va., he resigned his position in the army; was made maj.-gen. Confed. army, May 10, and general July 4. Defeated Oct. 3, 1861, by Gen. J. F. Reynolds, at the battle of Greenbrier, Western Va., he took com. of the S. Atlantic States; and, after Gen. Johnston was wounded at Fair Oaks (May 31, 1862), Lee was placed at the head of the army defending Richmond, and led it through the remainder of the Chickahominy campaign, in which McClellan was worsted. He attacked the army of Gen. Pope in Aug., and, forcing it back, invaded Md. Sept. 4–6, and occupied Frederick, but was defeated at Antietam (Sept. 17), and forced to retreat, which he did with little loss. Dec. 13, 1862, he defeated Burnside at Fredericksburg, Va.; and at Chancellorsville, May 2, 1863, defeated Hooker. He led his army into Pa.; and at Gettysburg was defeated with great loss by Gen. Meade, July 3–4, 1863. In the spring of 1864 Gen. Grant took com. of the Union forces; and after a struggle of 11 months of great severity, during which Lee was driven back upon Richmond and Petersburg, he was compelled to abandon Richmond, Apr. 2, 1865, and to surrender his entire army, Apr. 9, 1865. Sem., and was ord. to the ministry. He became an anti-slavery lecturer, and was sent a delegate to the World's Antislavery Convention of 1840, in London. U. S. consul at Genoa from June, 1842, to Sept. 1847. He has since practised law in N.Y. City. Besides contributing largely to the periodical press, he has edited various journals and magazines, and is the author of "The Glory and Shame of England," 2 vols. 1841; "Condition and Fate of England," 1842; "The Artist, Merchant, and Statesman," 1845; "Life and Voyages of Americus Vespucius," 1846; "Artists of America," 1846; "My Consulship," 1851; and other works. He has pub. translations of Alfieri's "Autobiography," 1845; d'Aneglio's "Challenge of Bartella," 1845; Machiavelli's "Florentine Histories," 1846.

Letcher, JOHN, gov. Va. 1860–4, b. Lexington, Va., Mar. 29, 1813. Studied at Wash. Coll. and at Rand. Macon Coll. Adopted the profession of the law, and was admitted to practice in 1839; during that year established and for a time edited the Valley Star in Lexington; member of the Const. Conv. of Va. in 1850; M. C. 1851–9, and a prominent secessionist. Has practised law since 1864.

Letcher, ROBERT P., b. Goochland Co., Va.; d. Frankfort, Ky., Jan. 24, 1861. He received a good education, and adopted the profession of the law; served some years in the State legisl., and was at one time speaker of the house; M.C. 1823–33; gov. of Ky. 1840–4; and minister to Mexico in 1849.

Leutze (loit'-seh), EMANUEL, painter, b. Gmund, Wurtemberg, May 24, 1816; d. Washington, D. C., July 18, 1868. In his youth he emigrated with his parents to Phila. He early displayed talent with the pencil, and acquired facility in taking likenesses. His first decided success in painting was a picture representing an Indian gazing at the setting sun, the success of which enabled him in 1841 to study at Dusseldorf under Lessing. His "Columbus before the Council of Salamanca" was purchased by the Dusseldorf Art Union; and his "Columbus in Chains" procured him the medal of the Brussels Art Exhibition. In 1843 he studied at Munich, where he finished his "Columbus before the Queen." After a lengthened tour in Italy, he in 1845 returned to Dusseldorf, where he m. and established himself, but in 1859 returned to the U. S. Among his best works are "The Landing of the Norsemen in America," "Cromwell and his Daughter," "The Court of Queen Elizabeth," "Henry VIII. and Anne Boleyn," and "The Iconoclast." He has depicted many of the striking events of the Revol. war, as "Washington Crossing the Delaware," "Washington at Monmouth," "Washington at the Battle of Monongahela," "News from Lexington," "Sergeant Jasper," and "Washington at Princeton." "Westward the Star of Empire takes it Way," a large picture for one of the staircases in the Capitol at Washington, is much the finest work of the kind in the U.S.

Louis, b. Bion, France, 1724; d. on the Mpi. River, near the mouth of the Ark. River, 20 June, 1778. He came to N. Orleans in 1763; and, with a company in which was Auguste Chouteau, established a trading-post where St. Louis now stands, and where they landed 15 Feb. 1764. Liguest selected the site in 1763; and acquired by trade with the Indians a large property. — Edwards's Great West.

Lillington, Gen. John Alexander, Revol. patriot, b. Barbadoes; d. at his residence in N. Hanover Co., N.C., at a good old age. Son of Col. George, an officer in the British service, who became a member of the Royal Council of Barbadoes in 1698. He emig. to Carolina ab. 1734, and on the breaking-out of the war was a member of the Wilmington com. of safety and a col. of militia. In the battle of Moore's Creek, Feb. 27, 1776, Col. Lillington was conspicuous; was soon afterwards promoted to brig.-gen.; and served under Gates in 1780. His son, Col. John Lillington, served his country faithfully during the entire war.

Lincoln, Abraham, 16th pres. of the United States, b. in Larue Co., Ky., Feb. 12, 1809; d. April 15, 1865, by the hand of the assassin, J. Wilkes Booth. His ancestors were Quakers from Bucks Co., Pa. His parents, b. in Va., migrated to Ky., and in 1816 removed to what is now Spencer Co., Ind., where Abraham was for the next 10 years occupied in labor on his father's farm. Having received, at intervals, about a year's schooling, at 19 he made a trip to New Orleans as a hired hand on a flat-boat. In Mar. 1830 he settled in Macon Co., Ill. He next assisted in building a flat-boat, and afterward in taking it to New Orleans. On his return, his employer gave him charge, as clerk, of a store and mill at New Salem. In 1832 he com. a company of vols. for the Black Hawk war. App. postmaster of New Salem, he began to study law, and engaged in surveying a portion of Sangamon Co. He was in the legisl. from 1834 to 1841. Licensed to practise law in 1836, he in 1837 opened an office at Springfield, rose rapidly to distinction, and was many years a prominent leader of the Whig party in Ill. In 1844 he canvassed the entire State, also a part of Ind., for Clay; making almost daily speeches to large audiences. M.C. from 1847 to 1849, he voted for the reception of antislavery memorials, the expediency of abolishing the slave-trade in the Dist., to prohibit slavery in the territory to be acquired from Mexico, and in favor of the Wilmot Proviso. He opposed the annexation of Texas, but voted for the loan-bill to enable the govt. to defray the expenses of the Mexican war. In the Whig National Convention of 1848 he advocated the nomination of Gen. Taylor. The repeal of the Mo. Compromise called him again into the political arena; and it was mainly by his efforts that the Republicans triumphed, and Judge Trumbull was elected U.S. senator. At the Repub. National Convention in 1856 he was a candidate for the nomination to the vice-presidency. June 2, 1858, he was nominated as candidate for U. S. senator, in opposition to Judge Douglas. The two candidates canvassed the State together, speaking on the same day at the same place. The debate, which was conducted with eminent ability on both sides resulted in the choice of Judge Douglas by the legisl., although the popular vote gave Mr. Lincoln a majority of over 4,000. At the Repub. National Convention, held May 16, 1860, he was nominated for the presidency, his principal competitor being Mr. Seward; and in the following Nov. was elected to that station, receiving 180 electoral votes to 72 for Mr. Breckenridge, 12 for Mr. Douglas, and 39 for Mr. Bell. The secession of the Southern slave-States followed; and Pres. Lincoln was inaug. Mar. 4, 1861, under the most gloomy auspices. He found the credit of the govt. greatly impaired, its navy scattered, its war matériel in the hands of the secessionists, who had seized forts, arsenals, mints, and vessels; its small army disarmed, and sent home by slow and devious routes as paroled prisoners; and the garrison of Fort Sumter nearly starved. The attempt to supply the garrison was frustrated by the rebel batteries, and, after 33 hours' siege, the fortress was surrendered April 14. On the 15th, a call was issued for 75,000 men. April 19, the ports of the seceded States were declared under blockade. Washington was soon strongly garrisoned; and Congress met in extra session July 4. His Proclam. of Emancip. took effect Jan. 1, 1863; re-elected to the presidency in 1864. Victory crowned the national arms during the succeeding winter, and the war was substantially closed, when the assassin, creeping stealthily from behind, as the President sat with his family and friends in his box in the theatre, on the night of April 14, 1865, inflicted a wound with a pistol-ball, which in a few hours ended his life. This event created unparalleled excitement. Nine of the persons implicated suffered condign punishment; while the funeral-honors paid to the deceased chief magistrate surpassed any thing of the kind in the history of the world.

Lincoln, Gen. Benjamin, a disting. Revol. officer, b. Hingham, Ms., Jan. 23, 1733; d. there May 9, 1810. Benjamin his father was a farmer, and a representative to the Gen. Court. Of a robust constitution, he was himself a farmer; was town representative; a maj.-gen. of militia at the opening of the war, and was active in its organization; sec. of the Prov. Congress; and member of the important com. of corresp. In June, 1776, he com. the exped. which cleared Boston harbor of British vessels. App. by Congress a maj.-gen. Feb. 19, 1777, and soon after joined the main army, but was surprised and nearly captured at Bound Brook, Apr. 13. In July he was sent to join Schuyler in opposing Burgoyne. He collected the N.E. militia; sent out a successful exped. Sept. 13, under Col. Brown, against the port of Lake George; and joined Gates as second in com. Sept. 29. He commanded in the works during the action of Oct. 7; and was severely wounded on the 8th, having mistaken some of the enemy for his own troops; and disabled until Aug. 1778; app. to the com. of the southern army, which he assumed at Charleston in Dec. By the defeat of Gen. Ashe, at Brier Creek, Mar. 2, 1779, Lincoln lost near one-fourth of his army. June 20, he attacked the enemy's works near Stono Ferry; but the severe action had no decisive result. In Sept. 1779 he joined D'Estaing off Savannah; and in a bloody assault, Oct. 9, their joint forces were repulsed with loss. Mar. 30, 1780, Sir H. Clinton, with a large army, appeared before the lines of Charleston, which Lincoln, with a very insufficient force, tried to defend. May 12, after a vigorous cannonade, a capitulation took place. The historian Ramsey gives him great praise for baffling 3 months the greatly superior force of Clinton and Arbuthnot. Exchanged in Nov., he rejoined Washington in the spring of 1781; com. a central division at Yorktown, and conducted the conquered army to the field where arms were deposited and the customary submission received. From Oct. 1781 to 1784, he was sec. of war, and retired with a vote of Congress, acknowledging his highly meritorious services. In 1787 he com. the force which suppressed Shays's insurrection; lieut.-gov. in 1787; coll. of Boston 1789–1808; commiss. to the Creek Indians in 1789, and to the Western tribes in 1793; the latter part of his life was passed in literary and scientific pursuits. Member of the convention which ratified the U.S. Constitution; member of the Amer. Acad. of Arts and Sciences.

Lincoln, ENOCH, gov. of Maine 1827–9, b. Worcester, Ms., Dec. 28, 1788; d. Augusta, Oct. 8, 1829. Son of Atty.-Gen. Levi Lincoln. Was adm. to the bar in 1811; settled as a lawyer in Fryeburg, Me.; and in 1819 removed to Paris, Me. M.C. 1818–26. While at Fryeburg he pub. a poem entitled "The Village" (1816); and was also a contributor to the historical collections of Maine. His proclamations were marked by a peculiar felicity and terseness of expression; and his official correspondence embraced an energetic vindication of the rights of the State in the question of the N.E. boundary. He delivered a poem at the centennial celebration of the fight at Lovewell's Pond, and an oration at the laying of the corner-stone of the Capitol at Augusta, July, 1829.

Lincoln, LEVI, lawyer and statesman, b. Hingham, Ms., May 15, 1749; d. Worcester, Apr. 14, 1820. H.U. 1772. His ancestor Samuel came from Hingham, Eng., in 1627. He studied law under Joseph Hawley, and, settling at Worcester in 1775, became eminent in the profession; became clerk of the court in 1775, and judge of probate in 1776. Zealous in the cause of independence, he was the author of numerous patriotic appeals. In 1779 he was the govt. commiss. for confiscated estates. A delegate to the State Const. Conv. in 1780; and elected to the Old Congress in 1781, but declined. In the party divisions of John Adams's administration, he was a zealous Democ., and wrote a series of political papers called "Farmer's Letters." Member of the house 1796, and of the senate in 1797; M.C. 1799–1801; U.S. atty.-gen. 1801–5; member of State council 1806; lieut.-gov. 1807–8; acting gov. in 1809; and in 1811 was app. associate judge of the U.S. Supreme Court, but declined. He was an original member of the Amer. Acad. of Arts and Sciences; was connected with other literary bodies; and was long at the head of the Ms. bar. Two of his sons, Levi and Enoch, were governors of States.

Lincoln, LEVI, LL.D. (H.U. 1826), statesman, son of Levi, b. Worcester, Ms., Oct. 25, 1782; d. there May 29, 1868. H.U. 1802. Adm. to the bar in 1805, he practised with success in his native city. He was a State senator in 1812; member of the house in 1816–23 (speaker in 1822); lieut.-gov. of Ms. 1823; judge of the Supreme Court in 1824; gov. of Ms. 1825–34; M.C. 1835–41; coll. of the port of Boston 1841 to Sept. 1843; member of the State Senate in 1844; pres. of that body in 1845. He was the first mayor of Worcester in 1848, and was a member of numerous historical and scientific societies. He was a warm opponent of the Hartford Convention, and was a member of the State Const. Conv. of 1820. He was the first gov. of Ms. who exercised the veto power, the occasion being the construction of a bridge uniting Boston and Charlestown; many years pres. of the Worcester Agric. Soc.; fellow of the Amer. Acad. of Arts and Sciences; and a member of the Antiquarian and Hist. Societies of Ms.

Lincoln, WILLIAM, antiquarian, b. Worcester 1801; d. there Oct. 5, 1843. H.U. 1822. He studied law with his bro. Gov. Levi; edited the National Ægis; with Mr. Baldwin pub. the Worcester Magazine 1826–7. Author of a "History of Worcester," 1837, a new ed. of which was pub. by Charles Hersey in 1862; Oration at Worcester, 4 July, 1816; and Memoir of C. C. Baldwin in Colls. Amer. Ant. Soc. ii. He was an early and active member of the Antiquarian Society.

Lindsay, CHARLES, a Canadian journalist and political writer, b. Lincolnshire, England, early in 1820. He came to Canada in 1842, and for some time edited an obscure paper in Canada West. Becoming known, in 1846 Mr. Lindsay became sub-editor of the Examiner, Mr. Hincks's organ in Toronto, until in 1852 he became editor of the Toronto Leader, the most influential and widely-circulated political and family paper in the province. He has written "Clergy Reserves," "The Maine Liquor-Law," and "The Prairies of the Western States." — Morgan.

Lindsley, PHILIP, D.D. (Dick. Coll. 1823), educator, b. Morristown, N.J., Dec. 21, 1786; d. Nashville, Tenn., May 25, 1855. N.J. Coll. 1804. Licensed to preach 24 Apr. 1810. He was tutor at Princeton in 1807–9 and in 1812; in 1813 he became prof. of languages; in 1817 was made vice-pres.; and in 1823 was chosen president, but declined. He accepted the thrice-tendered presidency of the U. of Nashville in Dec. 1824, and through his efforts the standard of education was raised to a level with that of the oldest and best-endowed colleges of the Atlantic States. In Oct. 1850 he resigned this office, and resided during the last four years of his life at New Albany, Ind., two years of this time being spent as prof. of archæology and church polity in the theol. sem. there. Such was his reputation, that he was offered the presidency of ten different colleges between 1820 and 1839. In May, 1834, he was elected moderator of the Gen. Assembly of the Presb. Church, then in session at Phila. His works, edited by L. J. Halsey, D.D., were pub. Phila. 3 vols. 8vo.

Lingan, Gen. James Maccubin, Revol. officer, b. Md. ab. 1752; killed by a mob in Baltimore, July 28, 1812. He fought at Long Island; was made prisoner at Fort Washington, and experienced the horrors of the prison-ship. After the war he was made coll. of the port of Georgetown. A political article in the Federal Republican, newspaper of Mr. Hanson, occasioned an attack on the premises of the editor in Baltimore, whose friends, among them Gens. Lingan and Lee, rallied to his support, and fired on the mob, killing Dr. Gale, and wounding others. Surrendering themselves to the civil authorities next day, a bloodthirsty mob forced the jail, killed Gen. Lingan, and dreadfully mangled 11 others, including Gen. Lee and Mr. Hanson.

Liniers, Bremont, Don Santiago, a Spanish naval officer, b. Niort, ab. 1760; d. Aug. 26, 1809. He was at first in the Maltese service; then in that of Spain, in which he became capt. of a ship before the French revol. His first service of importance was against the English, under Whitelocke, in S. America, from whom he took Buenos Ayres, and was app. capt.-gen. of Rio de la Plata. On the invasion of Spain by Bonaparte, he endeavored in vain to engage Liniers in his interests; but his temporizing policy excited suspicion both in America and Spain, and he was superseded by the viceroy, Don Cisneros. The latter becoming unpopular, a revolution was excited; and Liniers, having declared for the royal authority, was taken, condemned to death, and shot.

Lining, John, M.D., physician, b. Scotland, 1708; d. Charleston, S. C., 1760. He received an excellent education; came to Amer. ab. 1730; was a corresp. of Franklin, and the first to introduce an electrical apparatus into Charleston. He was a skilful practitioner there nearly 30 years. He pub. in the Trans. of the Roy. Soc. a series of judicious statical experiments, conducted in 1738–42. Livingston, EDWARD, jurist and statesman, b. Clermont, Columbia Co., N.Y., 26 May, 1764; d. Rhinebeck, N.Y., 23 May, 1836. N. J. Coll. 1781. Great-grandson of Robert, first proprietor of the manor of Livingston, and son of Robert R. His mother was Margaret Beekman. He m. Mary McEvers of N.Y. City, where he began practice in 1785, and soon acquired a high reputation as a jurist and advocate. M.C. in 1795–1801, and an opponent of the administrations of Washington and Adams; app. in Mar. 1801 U.S. dist.-atty. for N.Y., and chosen mayor for two years, being at the same time judge of the municipal court. In the autumn of 1803 he became a public defaulter in consequence of the misconduct of a clerk; made an assignment of his property; and, in Feb. 1804, removed to New Orleans. Having lost his first wife, he m. a Creole, Louise Moreau de Lassy, in 1805. Meeting great professional success in N. Orleans, he paid in full the debt he owed the govt. Becoming involved in litigation with the Federal Govt. about the title to the batture lands in N. Orleans, it was the subject of a special message to Congress, 7 Mar. 1808, and of a pamphlet by Jefferson, as well as one from Livingston in reply. The latter gained his case. One of his first labors in La. was the preparation of a code of judicial procedure in force from 1805 to 1825. His improvements both in the civil and criminal code (begun in 1821) established his fame both at home and abroad. In regard to capital punishment, he approved the humane suggestions of Beccaria. This code has visibly influenced the legislation of several countries. At the battle of New Orleans, 8 Jan. 1815, he acted as aide-de-camp to Gen. Jackson, who was his intimate friend. M.C. from La. 1823–9; U.S. senator 1829–31; sec. of State, May, 1831–May, 1833; and minister to France until the close of 1835. In Congress he attempted to reform the criminal code, carried laws for the protection and relief of American seamen in foreign lands, and promoted the establishment and increase of the navy. An eloquent eulogy upon his life and works was pronounced by Mignet in 1838, before the French Acad., of which Livingston was a member. Amiability and goodness of heart were noticeable features of his character. His bro.-in-law Davezac prepared a vol. of "Reminiscences of Livingston," a portion of which app. in the Democ. Review, to which, about 1840, he was a frequent contrib. He pub. Judicial Opinions delivered in the Mayor's Court, N.Y. 1802; "Report to the Assembly of La. of the Plan of the Penal Code."

He became a prominent merchant of N.Y. City; was an alderman in 1754–8; and became a member of the legisl. in 1759. He was one of the com. of corresp. with the agent for the Colony in Eng., Edmund Burke. In 1764 he reported to the house a petition to the king, afterwards adopted, opposing the intended taxation of the Colonies; and in 1768, as speaker, he signed the answer of the house to the Boston letter, and also to two memorials to the British parliament; in 1769 he was unseated by the Tory majority. Member of the Cont. Congress in 1774–8, he not only signed but strenuously advocated the Decl. of Indep. Oct. 11. 1774, he was, with Lee and Jay, app. to prepare a memorial to the people of British America, and an address to the people of Great Britain. April 26, 1775, he was chosen pres. of the Prov. Congress; and Feb. 1, 1776, was unanimously elected to the Assembly. He was a member of the senate pending the question of the adoption of the State Constitution; a member of the board of the Cont. treasury in 1776, and of its marine com. in 1777. He founded the professorship of divinity at Y.C. in 1746; was one of the founders of the N.Y. Society Library, and of the Chamber of Commerce; and aided materially in the establishment of Col. Coll. Previous to his decease he sold part of his property to sustain the public credit. His son Henry Philip was a member of Washington's family in 1778.

Livingston, Robert R., judge, b. 1719; d. Phila. Dec. 9, 1775. Eldest son of Robert, merchant of New York, who was second son of the first owner of Livingston Manor, and who d. Clermont, 27 June, 1775, a. 88. App. judge of the Admiralty Court in 1760; and in 1763 a justice of the N.Y. Sup. Court; rep. was sec. of foreign affairs from Aug. 1781 to Aug. 1783; and during the Revol. signalized himself by his zeal and efficiency in the cause. Member of the N.Y. Const. Conv. in Apr. 1777; he was chancellor of the state from 1777 until Feb. 1801, as such administering the oath of office to Washington upon his inaug. as pres. In 1788 he was chairman of the N.Y. convention to consider the U.S. Constitution, and principally instrumental in procuring its adoption. Minister-plenipo. to France in 1801–4, he procured the cession of La. in Apr. 1803, and a settlement for the numerous spoliations by the French on our commerce. Napoleon, on taking leave of him, presented to him a splendid snuff-box, with a miniature likeness of himself by Isabey. While in Paris, he formed a friendship for Fulton, whom he materially assisted in his plans of steam-navigation. He introduced into N. Y. the use of gypsum, and the breed of merino sheep; and was pres. of the N.Y. Acad. of Fine Arts, and also of the Agric. Society. Few men have been concerned in events of greater importance to the country,—the Decl. of Indep., the framing of the Constitutions of N.Y. and of the U.S., the purchase of La. Terr., the germ of many important States, and, lastly, the invention of steam-navigation, in which he was the efficient coadjutor of Fulton. He pub. Livingston, WILLIAM, LL.D. (Y.C. 1788). Statesman, bro. of Philip, b. Albany, ab. Nov. 30, 1723; d. Elizabethtown, N. J., July 25, 1790. Y.C. 1741. He became an eminent member of the bar of N.Y. and N.J. In 1752 he pub. with Wm. Smith, jun., the first "Digest of the Colony Laws," and commenced a weekly political, miscellaneous journal, the Independent Reflector; in 1757 he pub. in defence of Gov. Shirley, "A Review of the Military Operations in N.A., from 1753 to April 14, 1756, in a Letter to a Nobleman;" in 1758 he was elected a member of the Assembly. He wrote much in opposition to the proposed American Episcopate. Having purchased a tract of land in Elizabethtown, N. J., he built a house, which he called "Liberty Hall;" in 1773 he removed there, where he passed the remainder of his life. He early espoused the cause of the Colonies; was elected a delegate to the first Cont. Congress from N. J. in 1774; was unanimously re-elected in 1775, and was put on several of the most important committees; but was recalled June 5, to command as brig.-gen. the State militia, and after Wm. Franklin was deposed, in June, 1776, succeeded to the office of gov., which he retained to the close of his life. In the trying circumstances in which N. Jersey was placed, as a frontier State, during the Revol., he conducted his govt. with great judgment and energy. The British made several expeditions for the purpose of kidnapping that "Don Quixote of the Jerseys" (as they called the gov., who was tall in person and very thin); but he was always fortunate enough to escape. In 1787 he was a delegate to the convention which framed the Federal Constitution; he refused the app. of commiss. to superintend the construction of the Federal buildings, and of minister to Holland. A Memoir by Theodore Sedgewick, with his Corresp., was pub. in 1832. Logan (TAH-GAH-JUTE), an eloquent Indian chief; d. 1780, a. ab. 55. He was named Logan after James Logan, sec. of Pa.; and was the son of Shikellaney, a celebrated Cayuga chief who dwelt at Shamokin on the Susquehanna. Subsequently to 1767, he removed to the West, where, in 1772, the Moravian missionary Heckwelder met him on the Beaver River, and recognized his extraordinary capacity. He spoke English with fluency and correctness. Logan's family were massacred by a party of whites in the spring of 1774; and, in revenge, Logan butchered men, women, and children, and took part in the battle of Point Pleasant, Oct. 10, 1774. The Indians were defeated, and sued for peace: Logan refused to attend the treaty, but sent by an interpreter, in a wampum belt, a speech of great eloquence and pathos, preserved in Jefferson's "Notes on Va." In the fall of 1779 he again resumed his onslaughts on the banks of the Holston. In June, 1780, he joined Capt. Bird of Detroit in a bloody raid into Kentucky. Not long after, at an Indian council held at Detroit, while frenzied by liquor, he felled his wife by a sudden blow. He fled, supposing he had killed her. Overtaken between Sandusky and Detroit by a troop of Indians, whom he supposed her avengers, he frantically exclaimed that the whole party should fall by his weapons: while leaping from his horse to execute his threat, an Ind. shot him dead. — See Brantz Mayer's Disc. bef. Md. Hist. Soc. 9 May, 1851.

Logan, GEN. BENJAMIN, an early pioneer of Ky., b. Pa. ab. 1742; d. Shelby Co., Ky., Dec. 11, 1802. His father, an Irishman, came to this country early in the 18th century, and settled in Pa., but subsequently removed to Augusta Co., Va. Young Logan, though entitled by the laws of Va. to the whole of the landed property of his father at his decease, distributed it between his bros., sisters, and mother. At 21 he removed to the banks of the Holston, where he purchased a farm, and married. He was a sergeant in Bouquet's exped. in 1764; and in 1774 he was in Dunmore's exped. In 1775 he removed to Ky., and soon became particularly disting. In the spring of 1776 he took his family to a small settlement called Logan's Fort, near Harrodsburg; here he was attacked, May 20, 1777, by a large force of Indians, through which he made his way alone, and returned with supplies for his party, who soon succeeded in driving off the foe with loss. In July, 1779, he was second in com. of an unsuccessful exped. against Chillicothe, under Col. Bowman. He was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1788, when he conducted an exped. against the north-western tribes, burning their villages, and destroying their crops. Upon his return he devoted himself to the civil affairs of the country, being a member of the convention of 1792, which framed the first constitution of Ky. WILLIAM his son, U.S. senator 1819–20, d. Aug. 8, 1822. — McCluny West. Adventure.

Logan, CORNELIUS A., poet and dramatist, b. Baltimore, 1800; d. Cincinnati, Feb. 22, 1853. Educated at St. Mary's Coll. for the priesthood, disinclination to this career led him to make several voyages to Europe as a supercargo. Turning his attention to literature, he assisted Paul Allen in the Baltimore Chronicle; next turned theatrical critic in Phila.; and was afterward a comedian. In 1840 he removed to Cincinnati. He was a bold defender of the stage against pulpit attacks. His reply to a sermon by Lyman Beecher is admirable in learning as in temper. He wrote many plays, among them "The Wag of Maine," 3 acts, 1835; "The Wool-Dealer," a farce, written for Dan Marble; "Yankee Land," a comedy, 1834; "Removing the Deposits;" "Astarte," an adaptation of Shelley's "Cenci;" "A Hundred Years Hence," a burlesque. His poem "The Mississippi," was copied in the Edinburgh Review, with a handsome tribute to the author. His daughters Eliza, Olive, and Cecilia, have achieved distinction on the stage.

Logan, ELIZA, actress, b. Phila. Aug. 1830. Dau. of C. A. Logan; educated at an acad. at Lancaster, Pa. Trained for her profession by her father, she made her début Jan. 28, 1841, as Norval, at the Walnut-st. Theatre, Phila. She first app. in New York at the Broadway, in June, 1850, as Pauline in "The Lady of Lyons." In 1859 she m. George Wood the manager, bought Wood's Theatre, Cincinnati, and retired from the stage. Logan, GEORGE, M.D., philanthropist, b. Stenton, Pa., Sept. 9, 1753; d. there Apr. 9, 1821. Grandson of James Logan. After three years' study at the Med. School of Edinburgh (where he took his degree), he made a tour of the continent, and returned to America in 1779. He applied himself for some years to agriculture, which he was one of the first in America to prosecute successfully in a scientific manner; also served several terms in the legisl.; and in June, 1798, embarked for Europe, for the purpose of attempting to avert a threatened war between America and France. Dr. Logan persuaded the French Govt. to annul the embargo on Amer. shipping, and prepared the way for a negotiation, which terminated in peace. He was denounced by the Federalists, on his return, as the treasonable envoy of a faction; and, in the latter part of 1798, an act, known as "Logan's Act," was passed by Congress, making it a high misdemeanor for a private citizen to interfere in a controversy between the U.S. and a foreign country, in the manner he had done. U.S. senator from Pa. from 1801 to 1807. He went to Eng. in 1810, as a self-constituted agent, to attempt a reconciliation of the difficulties between Great Britain and the U.S.; but his mission was fruitless An active member of the Board of Agric. and of the Philosophical Society. He pub. "Experiments on Gypsum," and on the "Rotation of Crops," in 1797. He was a member of the Society of Friends. His widow Deborah, skilled in the early history of Pa., and a member of the Pa. Hist. Soc., d. Feb. 2, 1839, a. 77.

Logan, JAMES, a learned writer and statesman, b. Lurgan, Ireland, Oct. 20, 1674; d. Oct. 31, 1751, at Stenton, near Phila. Of Scottish parentage. At the age of 13 he had acquired Latin, Greek, and some Hebrew, and afterwards mastered mathematics, and the French, Italian, and Span. languages. While engaged in trade between Dublin and Bristol, Wm. Penn made proposals to him to accompany him to Pa. as his sec., which he accepted, and landed in Phila. in the beginning of Dec. 1699. Upon Penn's return to Eng. in 1701, he left his sec. invested with many important offices, which he discharged with fidelity and judgment. He filled the offices of provincial sec., commissioner of property, chief justice, and upon the demise of Gov. Gordon in Aug. 1736, governed the province for two years as pres. of the council. He was the friend of the Indians, possessed uncommon abilities, and great wisdom and moderation. His valuable library of 2,000 vols. he bequeathed to the public. Author of "Experimenta Meletemata de Plantarum Generatione," written in 1739; of two other Latin treatises of a scientific character, pub. in Holland; of an English translation of Cicero's "De Senectute," pub. in 1744, by Benj. Franklin; and of Cato's "Distichs," the latter in verse; and he left a variety of papers on ethics and philology. Logan's charges as chief justice were reprinted abroad, 4to, 1736. WILLIAM, his eldest son, many years in the governor's council, d. June, 1801. GEORGE his grandson was a disting. philanthropist. — See Memoirs of Logan, by W. Armistead; Sketch, by J. F. Fisher, in Sparks's Franklin.

Logan, JOHN ALEXANDER, soldier and senator, b. Jackson Co., Ill., 9 Feb. 1826. U. of Louisville, 1852. After receiving a common school education he served in the 1st Ill. regt. in the Mex. war, rising from the ranks to be lieut. and quarterm. Studied law; was adm. to practice in 1852; made prosec. atty. 3d jud. dist.; and was a Democ. member of the legisl., and M.C. in 1859–62; Repub. M.C. in 1867–71; app. minister to Mexico in Nov. 1865, and declined; chosen U.S. senator for the term of 1871–7. He fought at Bull Run 21 July, 1861, as a private in a Mich. regt.; returned to Ill. in Aug., and raised the 31st Ill. She withdrew from the stage, and sailed for Havre in 1857. After graduating with distinction at an English female coll., she became a contrib. to English and French papers, and in 1860 pub. two novels, "Chateau Frisac" and "Photographs of Paris Life." Aug. 29, 1864, she re-appeared at Wallack's Theatre, N.Y., in "Eveleen," her own play. She then starred in the West and South, and re-appeared in N.Y., at the Broadway, in Nov. 1865, in the play called "Sam," which ran nearly 100 nights. Retired from the stage in 1868, and has since lectured successfully, principally in behalf of the woman's rights movement. Married Edmund A. Delille, Apr. 1857; divorced Dec. 1865. She is a sprightly, piquant writer, and was, while upon the stage, one of its ornaments. Besides the above she has pub. "Women and Theatres," 1869, and a play.

Logan, Sir William Edmond, Canadian geologist, b. Montreal, Apr. 23, 1798. U. of Edinburgh, 1817. In 1818 he entered the mercantile office of his uncle in London, and became a partner. Returning to Canada for a brief time, his attention was drawn to its geology; but from 1829 to 1838 he managed a copper-smelting and coal-mining establishment in Swansea, South Wales, in which his uncle was interested. He studied the coal-field of that region; and his maps and sections were adopted by the ordnance geol. survey, and pub. by the govt. He was the first to demonstrate that the stratum of under-clay which underlies the coal-beds was the soil in which the coal-vegetation grew. In 1841 he visited the coal-fields of Pa. and Nova Scotia, and communicated several valuable memoirs to the Geol. Society of London. He was at the same time app. to the head of the geol. survey of Canada, where he still continues. He represented Canada at the Great Exhibition in London in 1851, and was made a fellow of the Roy. Society; and was also a commiss. at the Industrial Exhibition at Paris in 1855, where he received from the Imperial Commission the grand gold medal of honor, and was created a Knight of the Legion of Honor. In 1856 he was knighted by the queen, and received from the Geol. Society the Wollaston Palladium medal, for his prominent services in geology. His pub. works will be found in his Annual Reports of the Canadian Survey, Proceedings of the British Assoc. and the Geol. Soc., embracing important papers on the geology of Canada and the coal-districts of Pa. and N. Brunswick, beside his researches in Wales; d. June, 1875.

Longacre, JAMES BARTON, engraver, b. Del. Co., Pa., 11 Aug. 1794; d. Phila. Jan. 1, 1869. Descended from an early Swedish settler upon the banks of the Delaware, the family name having been originally Longker. He served his apprenticeship as hist. and port. engraver with Murray of Phila., and from 1819 to 1831 was employed in illustrating some of the best works then issuing from the Amer. press. In conjunction with James Herring of N.Y., he began the pub. of the "National Port. Gallery of Disting. Americans," 4 vols. 8vo, 1834–9, which he afterward continued alone. Many of the portraits in the work are from Mr. L's. drawings from life, and are admirably executed. During the last 25 years of his life (1844–69) he was engraver to the U.S. Mint. The new coins struck during that period — the doubleeagle, the three-dollar-piece, the gold dollar, &c. — were made by him from his own designs. One of the latest acknowledgments of his success in this dept. was a commiss. from the govt. of Chili to superintend the remodelling of the entire coinage of that country, — a work completed a year or two before his death.

Longfellow, ERNEST W., portrait, genre, and landscape painter of Boston, son of the poet Longfellow, b. Cambridge, 23 Nov. 1845. Camb. Scient. School, 1865. Studied at Paris during the winter of 1865–6, visited Italy, and returned home in the fall of 1866. After a second absence of 18 months in 1868–9, he returned again from Europe with many sketches, and several copies made in the Louvre. He is an artist of much promise.

Longfellow, HENRY WADSWORTH, LL.D. (H. U. 1859), poet, b. Portland, Me., Feb. 27, 1807. Bowd. Coll. 1825. Son of Hon. Stephen. At an early age he produced the "Hymn of the Moravian Nuns," "The Spirit of Poetry," "Woods in Winter," and "Sunrise on the Hills." After studying law in his father's office, he became prof. of modern languages and literature at Bowd. Coll.; spent 4 years (1826–30) in France, Spain, Italy, and Germany; and was in 1835–54 prof. of modern languages and belles-lettres at H. U. He made a second European tour in 1835–6. Shortly after connecting himself with Harvard, he took quarters in the old Craigie House, the Washington headquarters, which he has since purchased. In his contributions to the N. A. Review, in his translation of the "Coplas de Manrique" (1833), and in his "Outre-Mer" (1835), he endeavored to cultivate a taste here for European literature. He pub. "Hyperion," an exquisite prose romance, and "Voices of the Night," in 1839; "Ballads and other Poems," 1841; "Poems on Slavery," 1842; "The Spanish Student," 1843; "Poets and Poetry of Europe," 1845; "The Belfry of Bruges," 1846; "Evangeline," 1847; "Kavanagh," a novel, 1849; "Seaside and Fireside," 1850; "The Golden Legend," 1851; "The Song of Hiawatha," his most popular work, 1855; "The Courtship of Miles Standish," 1858; "Tales of a Wayside Inn," 1863; "Flower de Luce," 1866; and "New-England Tragedies," 1868. Many of his other poems are scattered through numerous periodicals. "As a translator, he has succeeded admirably in preserving the spirit of the originals, and as a poet he appeals to the universal affections of humanity by thoughts and images derived from original perceptions of nature and life." His works have passed through many editions, both in this country and in Eng. He has been a frequent contrib. of occasional poetry to the Atlantic Monthly. His translation of Dante (3 vols. 1867–70) is remarkable for fidelity to the original. No poet of the U.S. is so popular and well known in Eng. Mr. Longfellow's second wife was burned to death in 1861. His son ERNEST WADSWORTH is an artist in Boston.

(rank of major) 19 July, 1858; and resigned 1 June, 1861. Made brig.-gen. Confed. army 1 Oct. 1861, having previously com the 4th brigade of Beauregard's 1st corps at Bull Run 21 July; made maj.-gen 17 June, 1862; lieut.-gen. 8 May, 1864; and was disting. in all of Lee's campaigns. He was in the battles of the Peninsular campaign and that against Pope; com. the right wing at Antietam, and the left at Fredericksburg, 13 Dec. 1862; com. the 1st corps at Chancellorsville, at Gettysburg, at Chickamauga, 19–20 Sept. 1863; in the exped. against Knoxville in Nov. 1863; rejoined Lee in Mar. 1864; disting. and dangerously wounded in the battles of the Wilderness, 6 May, 1864; went to the aid of Early in the Shenandoah Valley; participated in the battles and operations of Lee's army in Va. in 1864–5; and surrendered with Lee in April, 1865. He was regarded as Lee's right hand, and was called by the soldiers "Uncle Peter."

Longstreet, WILLIAM, inventor, b. N. J. ab. 1760; d. Ga. 1814. He removed to Ga.; and ab. 1790 constructed a small model steamboat which made 5 miles per hour against the stream on the Savannah River. He next invented the "breast roller," moved by horse-power, entirely superseding the former method of ginning cotton, two of which he set up in Augusta, which were propelled by steam, and worked admirably. They were, however, soon destroyed by fire. He next erected steam-mills near St. Mary's, Ga., which were destroyed by the British in an invasion in the war of 1812. These disasters impoverished and discouraged him, but did not destroy his belief that steam would soon supersede all other motive-powers.

Longueuil (deh-lōn'-gul), PAUL JOSEPH DE, b. Canada; d. Tours, France, May 12, 1778. Son of Charles Le Moine, and bro. of Charles, second baron of Longueuil. Capt. in the troops of the marine; com. of Detroit 1747; lieut.-gov. of Three Rivers, and subsequently of Quebec. He m. in Canada after 1763; and fought against the Americans in 1775.—O'Callaghan.

Longworth, NICHOLAS, wine manufacturer, b. Newark, N.J., Jan. 16, 1782; d. Cincinnati, Feb. 10, 1863. In his youth he was a clerk in the store of an elder bro. in S.C. At the age of 21 he migrated to Cincinnati, then just settled; studied law under Jacob Burnet, and, foreseeing the future growth of the place, out of his professional earnings purchased considerable tracts of land, long since covered by the rapidly-increasing city. Retiring after 25 years' practice from the bar, he devoted himself to the culture of the grape, with a view to wine manuf., but was unsuccessful until he tried the species indigenous to our soil. His Catawba and Isabella wines attained a high market-value. He had 200 acres of vineyards. He was also favorably known as a horticulturist by his experiments on the sexual character of the strawberry. He was kindly, but eccentric, giving much to those whom he called "The Devil's Poor," — the vagabonds and estrays of social life. At his death, his property was estimated at nearly 15 million dollars. He pub. "Buchanan's Treatise on the Grape, with an Appendix on Strawberry-Culture by N. L." 8vo, 1852, rev. ed. 1856.

Looker, OTHNIEL, acting gov. of O. 1814, b. on L.I., N.Y., Oct. 4, 1757; d. Palestine, Ill., 5 Apr. 1845. He began life as a weaver's apprentice, but by his own exertions obtained a liberal education; served 5 years in the Revol. army, and in both branches of the legisl. of N.Y. In 1804 he removed to Hamilton Co., O., and soon after was elected to the State senate, where he continued by re-election for many years. In 1814 he became gov. by virtue of his office as speaker of the senate, in place of Gov. R. J. Meigs; seven years assoc. judge C.C.P.

Loomis, ELIAS, LL.D. (U. of N.Y. 1854), physicist, b. Tolland Co., Ct., Aug. 1811. Y.C. 1830. Tutor there 1836–9. He was the first American who saw Halley's comet at its return in Aug. 1835, of which he pub. an account in the Jour. of Science. After a visit to Europe in 1836–7, he became prof. of nat. philos. in the W. Reserve Coll., O.; from 1844 to 1859 held the same chair in the U. of N.Y.; and succeeded Prof. Olmstead in the same chair at Y.C. 1860, which he now holds. Between 1845 and 1849 he was employed, under the direction of the supt. of the coast-survey, in determining Minister to France 1853–62, negotiating treaties with Eng., France, and Sardinia. Assumed the presidency on the death of his father Carlos Antonio, 10 Sept. 1862. He declared war against Brazil in Dec. 1864, and com. his army in person with varying success, prolonging the contest until his resources were exhausted, and his country ruined. His defence of Humaita was desperate and brilliant; and he contested the ground inch by inch against overwhelming numbers. — See Washburne's Paraguay.

Lopez, NARCISO, Cuban revolutionist, b. Venezuela, 1799; garrotted at Havana, Sept. 20, 1851. His father conducted a commercial house at Caracas, a branch of which, at Valencia in the interior, was placed under the charge of Narciso, when quite young. During the troubles of 1814, he sided with the popular party, but enlisted in the Spanish army, in which he was a col., in 1822. After the Spanish evacuated Venezuela, Lopez went to Cuba, where he established himself, soon making himself conspicuous by his advocacy of liberal principles. During the first Carlist troubles, he was in Madrid on private business, and, joining the royalist party, was honored by the queen, but threw up his offices, including that of senator for Seville, after the refusal of the Cortes to admit the representatives of Cuba. On his return, he was employed by Gov.-Gen. Valdes in various capacities; also turned his attention to the exploration of copper mines. In 1849 Lopez came to the U.S., and organized the force which made the attempt at an invasion known as the Round Island exped. In Aug. 1851 he again landed in Cuba at Bahia Honda, but after a brief contest was captured and executed.

He was employed in most of the cases involving large moneyed interests for a period of 50 years.

Lord, ELEAZAR, LL.D. (U. of N.Y. 1866), author and philanthropist, b. Franklin, Ct., 9 Sept. 1788; d. Piermont, N.Y., 3 June, 1871. Received the hon. degree of A.M. from Dartm. in 1821, and from Wms. Coll. in 1827. Rufus, Thomas, and David N., well-known merchants of N.Y., were his bros. He studied at Andover; removed to N.Y. in 1809; pub. a pamphlet which led to the formation of the Amer. and other educational societies; entered the ministry in 1812, and, after 2 years of occasional preaching, was compelled by weakness of the eyes to abandon professional study. Towards the end of 1815, he took the lead in founding the N.Y. S.S. Union Soc., of which he was corresp. sec. in 1818–26, and pres in 1826–36; also assisting in the formation of the Home and Foreign Missionary, and other philanthropic societies. In 1817–18 he was in Europe, where he enjoyed the acquaintance of many distinguished men. After his return, he engaged in banking in N. Y. City; advocated the protection of Amer. manufactures, and induced Henry Clay to investigate the subject more fully than he had done, and to avow himself in opposition to free-trade. Founder of the Manhattan Ins. Co., and its pres. in 1821–34; he introduced important changes in the whole system of insurance. Prominent, also, in establishing the Erie Railroad, and its pres. from its organization until 1845, managing its affairs with scrupulous fidelity. In his "Principles of Currency and Banking," 1829, 3d ed. 1835, he recommended the system adopted in 1838 in N.Y., and afterward in several other States, known as the "free-banking system." He also assisted in founding the theol. seminaries at Auburn and at E. Windsor, and in establishing the U. of N.Y., of which he was for many years a trustee. Removing to Piermont in 1836, he devoted himself to the composition of theol. works, among which are, "Geology and Scriptural Cosmogony," 1843; "The Epoch of Creation," 1851; "The Messiah in Moses and the Prophets," 1853; "Symbolic Prophecy," 1854; "Plenary Insp. of the Holy Scriptures," 1857; "The Prophetic office of Christ," 1858; "Analysis of the Book of

Lunt, REV. WILLIAM PARSONS, D.D. (H.U. 1850), a popular and eloquent Unitarian divine, b. Newburyport, Apr. 21, 1805; d. Akbah in Arabia Petræa, March 20, 1857. H.U. 1823. Gr.-son of Capt. Henry. Studied law one year. Ord. pastor of the Second Unit. Church in New York 19 June, 1828, which he left Nov. 19, 1833, and was pastor of the Unit. church, Quincy, Ms., from June 3, 1835, to his d. He left home in Dec. 1856 to make the tour of Europe. His writings, both in prose and poetry, display a singularly pure taste and classic refinement, and have been much admired. He pub. a number of occasional discourses.

Luque de (dā-loo'-kā), HERNANDO, a Spanish bishop of Peru; d. 1532. He was a priest of Panama, when in 1525 he associated himself with Pizarro and Almagro in an exped. for the conquest of Peru, furnishing the money for the enterprise. — See Herrera; and Prescott's Conquest of Peru.

Lusk, JOHN, an aged soldier, b. Staten Island, N.Y., Nov. 5, 1734; d. near McMinnville, Tenn., June 8, 1838, a. 104. Of Dutch extraction. He was in the military service nearly 60 years. He commenced this career when ab. 20, at the conquest of Acadie; was present at the siege of Quebec; saw the brave Gen. Wolfe fall on the Plains of Abraham; served in Arnold's exped to Canada; was engaged in the erection of Fort Edward, and was there wounded; was at the battle of Saratoga, the surrender of Burgoyne, and also of Cornwallis; and subsequently served under Wayne in the campaign against the Indians.

Luzenberg, CHARLES A., surgeon, b. Verona, July 31, 1805; d. Cincinnati, July 15, 1848. Of Austrian parentage. He came with his family in 1819 to Phila., attending the lectures of the Jeff. Med. Coll., giving special attention to surgery. In 1829 he went to N. Orleans; became house surgeon to the Charity Hospital, and soon became celebrated in his profession; established the Medical School, of which he was the first dean; founded the Society of Nat. Hist. in 1839, and in 1843 the La. Medico-Chirurgical Society, of both which he was first pres. In 1832–4 he visited Europe. He performed successfully many of the most difficult surgical operations, such as the extirpation of the parotid gland, the excision of 6 inches of the ilium, and the tying of the primitive iliac artery. — Gross's Med. Biog.

Luzerne, ANNE CÆSAR DE LA, LL.D. (H.U. 1781), a French diplomatist, b. Paris, 1741; d. Eng. Sept. 14, 1791. After having served in the Seven-Years' War, in which he rose to the rank of col., he abandoned the military career, resumed his studies, and turning his views to diplomacy, in 1776 was sent as envoy-extr. to Bavaria. In 1778 he was app. to succeed Gerard as minister to the U.S.; arrived in Phila. Sept. 21, 1779, and conducted himself, during 4 years in which he remained there, with a prudence, wisdom, and concern for their interests, that gained him the esteem and affection of the Americans. In 1780, when the American army was in the most destitute condition, and the government without resources, he aided with his purse in relieving the distress. In 1783 he returned to France, having received the most flattering expressions of esteem from Congress; and in 1788 was sent ambassador to London, where he remained till his d. When the Federal Govt. was organized, the sec. of state addressed a letter to the Chevalier de la Luzerne, by direction of Washington, making an express acknowledgment of his services, and the sense of them entertained by the nation.

Lyell, SIR CHARLES, D.C.L. (Oxf. 1855), LL.D. (H.U. 1844), a British geologist, b. Kinnordy, Forfarshire, Nov. 14, 1797; d. Feb. 22, 1875. Oxford U. 1821. Originally a lawyer. The lectures of Prof. Buckland turned his attention to geology. The first vol. of his "Principles of Geology" appeared in Jan. 1830, and was received with great favor. This work in 1838 was divided into two treatises, — the "Elements of Geology," and the "Principles;" and in 1851 the "Elements" appeared with the title of "Manual of Elementary Geology." In 1841 he visited the U.S., delivered a course of lectures on geology in Boston, travelled extensively through the Northern and Middle States, and investigated the geological features of the country. His "Travels in N. A. in the Years 1841–2" (2 vols. 8vo, Lond. 1845) contain the general results of this journey. The scientific papers connected with it are found in the "Proceedings" and "Trans." of the Geol. Soc. of Lond., the "Reports of the British Association," and the "Am. Journal of Science." In a second journey, made in Sept. 1845–June, 1846, he visited the Southern States, and passed up the Mpi. He pub. "A Second Visit to the U.S.," 2 vols. 8vo. Lond. 1849. In 1849 he was knighted; was elected pres. of the Geol. Society in 1836 and 1850; created a baronet in [illegible]

Lyman, PHINEAS, maj.-gen., b. Durham, Ct., ab. 1716; d. W. Flor., Sep. 10, 1774. Y. C. 1738; tutor there 1738–41. He was bred a weaver, but soon raised himself above this condition, engaged in mercantile pursuits, and finally settled as a lawyer in Suffield. He took a conspicuous part in the dispute between Ct. and Ms. relative to the right of jurisdiction over the town of Suffield; was for some years a magistrate, held various public offices, and was app. maj.-gen. and com.-in-chief of the Ct. forces, and built Fort Lyman, now called Fort Edward, N.Y. He served under Sir William Johnson at the battle of Lake George, and, after Johnson was disabled, conducted the engagement to a successful issue. He served under Abercrombie in 1758; was with Lord Howe when he was killed; was at the capture of Crown Point, the surrender of Montreal; and in 1762 led the provincial troops against Havana. In 1763 he went to Eng. as the agent of his brother officers to receive their share of prize-money, also as agent of a company called the Military Adventurers, to solicit a grant of land on the Mpi. Deluded from year to year by idle promises, he sunk to imbecility, and returned in 1774, about which time a tract near Natchez was granted to the petitioners. He went thither with his eldest son and other emigrants, and died soon after reaching West Florida. The emigrants, after undergoing many hardships, were obliged, on the conquest of the country by the Spaniards in 1781–2, to take refuge in Savannah.

Lyman, THEODORE, mayor of Boston 1832–5, b. there Feb. 19, 1792; d. July 17, 1849. H.U. 1810. The son of a rich and liberal merchant of that city, he inherited a fortune. He received his early education at Phillips Exeter Acad. In 1814 he visited Europe; afterward studied law, and made a second visit to Europe; in 1819 he began to take part in the business of public life; was an efficient member of both branches of the legisl.; delivered the 4th of July oration in Boston in 1820; and took an interest in the militia, and for a time was brig.-gen.; was an active member of the State Hortic. Society, and at his decease gave to it $10,000; a trustee and liberal benefactor of the Farm School, to which at his decease he also bequeathed $10,000. He founded the State Reform School at Westborough, to endow which he first gave $22,000, and at his death bequeathed to it $50,000 more. Author of "A Few Weeks at Paris;" "Political State of Italy," 1820; "Account of the Hartford Convention," 1823; "Diplomacy of the U.S.," 2 vols. 1828.

Lyman, WILLIAM, b. Northampton, Ms. 1753. Y.C. 1776. M. C. 1793–7; consul at London from 1805 to his d., Oct. 1811; member of the Ms. legisl. 1787; State senator 1789; brig.-gen. of militia.

Lyman, WILLIAM, D. D. (N. J. Coll. 1808), minister of Haddam, Ct., and China, N.Y.; d. 1833, a. ab. 70. Y. C. 1784. He pub. Election Serm. 1806; on the death of Mrs. Griswold of Lyme; Dedication Serm. at Lebanon, 1807; Ordination of J. Harvey, 1810.

Lynch, COL. CHARLES, Revol. officer; d. soon after 1783, at Staunton, Campbell Co., Va. His bro. JOHN was the founder of Lynchburg, Va.; and his son CHARLES, gov. of Mpi. 1835–7, d. near Natchez, Feb. 16, 1853. At Guilford a regt. of riflemen under Col. Lynch behaved with great gallantry. The term "lynch law" was occasioned by his apprehending, and causing to be punished without any superfluous legal ceremony, a lawless band of Tories and desperadoes that infested that newly-settled country. — Va. Hist. Colls.

Lynch, ISIDORE DE, a French gen. of Irish descent, b. Lond. June 7, 1755; d. Aug. 4, 1841. He was educated at the Coll. of Louis le Grand at Paris; entered the army; made the campaigns of 1771–2 in India, and subsequently those of the war of the United States. Before rejoining the army of Rochambeau, in which he was aide to the Marquis de Chastellux, he had taken part in the exped. of D'Estaing, and at the siege of Savannah exhibited a cool bravery worthy the record of it in the Memoirs of Count Segur. On his return to France he was made second col. of the regt. of Walsh, and received the cross of St. Louis. He was a lieut.-gen. at the battle of Valmy. — Biog. Univ. Suppt.

Lynch, THOMAS, Jun., signer of the Decl. of Indep., b. Prince George Parish, S.C., Aug. 5, 1749; d. at sea in the latter part of 1779. Of Austrian descent. His father, a man of great wealth and influence, having early espoused the cause of the Colonists, was a member of the Cont. Congress from 1774 till his d. in 1776. His son was educated at Eton and Cambridge, Eng.; afterward studied law at the Temple, but, before completing his course, returned to Amer. in 1772. Relinquishing the profession of the law, he settled upon a plantation on the North Santee River, presented to him by his father, and m. a Miss Shubrick. In 1775 he was chosen a capt. in the 1st S.C. regt.; but, in consequence of the illness of his father, toward the close of that year was elected to fill his seat in Congress. The decline of his health obliged him in the autumn of 1776 to retire from public employment. Near the close of 1779 he embarked for St. Eustatia, with the intention of visiting Europe, and, by some unknown accident, perished, with all the ship's company, at sea.

Lynch, WILLIAM F., naval officer, b. Va. 1801; d. Baltimore, Oct. 17, 1865. Midshipm. Jan. 26, 1819; lieut. May, 1828; com. Sept. 1849; capt. Apr. 1856. In 1847 he planned an exped. to explore the course of the River Jordan and the shores of the Dead Sea; sailed in Nov. for Smyrna; arrived with his party in the Bay of Acre Mar. 31, 1848, and in April was upon the Lake of Tiberias, and commenced the navigation of the Jordan to the Dead Sea, which they reached Apr. 18. A thorough exploration was made; and the depression of the Dead Sea below the Mediterranean was found to be 1,312 feet. Lieut. Lynch's narrative of this exped. has passed through 7 editions. He subsequently planned an exploration of Western Africa, which was not executed. He is also the author of "Naval Life, or Observations Afloat and on Shore," 12mo, 1851. He resigned April 21, 1861; June 10, 1861, was app. a commodore in the Confed. navy; led a flotilla in defence of Roanoke Island and the coast of N.C.; and was defeated (Feb. 9, 1862) by Flag-Officer Goldsborough. He was subsequently in com. of the defences of Smithville, near Fort Fisher, N.C.

Lynde, BENJAMIN, chief justice of Ms., b. Salem, Sept. 22, 1666; d. Jan. 28, 1745. H.U. 1686. He studied law at the Temple, Lond.; was app. judge in 1712, and ch. justice in 1729. Member of the council from 1723 to 1737. Descended from a Dorsetshire family. His son BENJAMIN, jurist, b. Oct. 5, 1700, d. Oct. 9, 1781. H.U. 1718. From 1737 he was many years a member of the council, representative, naval officer of the port, a judge of the Court of Sessions and C. Pl., and, toward the close of life, judge of probate. Judge of the Supreme Judicial Court from 1745 to 1771. At the trial of Capt. Preston in 1770 he presided in court. He resigned the office of chief justice in 1772.

Lyndon, JOSIAH, gov. R.I. 1768, b. Newport, Mar. 10, 1721; d. Warren, Mar. 30, 1778.

Lyon, ASA, minister, b. Pomfret, Ct., Dec. 31, 1763; d. South Hero, Grand Isle Co., Vt., April 4, 1841. Dartm. Coll. 1790. Pastor of the Cong. church at Sunderland, Ms., from Oct. 4, 1792, to Sept. 23, 1793; at South Hero, Vt., from Dec. 21, 1802, to Mar. 15, 1840; and was M.C. from Vt. in 1815–17. App. chief judge of Grand Isle Co. in 1805, '6, '8, and '13; was a representative in 1802, '4, '5, '6, and '8, and from 1810 to 1814; was a member of the exec. council in 1808. He was an able preacher, and pub. sermons and patriotic addresses, indicating a high order of talent and scholarship.

Lyon, MARY, teacher, b. Buckland, Ms., Feb. 28, 1797; d. South Hadley, Ms., Mar. 5, 1849. She commenced teaching at Shelburne Falls in 1814; from the fall of 1821 till the spring of 1824 she taught in the Sanderson Acad., Ashfield; from 1824 to 1828 she was associated with Miss Grant in teaching the Adams Female Acad. at Londonderry, N.H., and afterward at Ipswich; for 6 years, during winters, when the acad. was closed, she taught school in Buckland and Ashland; in the autumn of 1834 she resigned; and Nov. 8, 1837, she opened the Mt. Holyoke Female Seminary, in South Hadley, over which she presided 12 years. A feature of her plan, to which there was much opposition, was, that the whole domestic labor of the institution was to be performed by the pupils and teachers; and it was intended to make the pupils independent of servants, to teach self-denial, to promote their health, and to preserve their interest in domestic duties. She pub. a pamphlet entitled "Tendencies of the Principles embraced and the System adopted in the Mt. Holyoke Female Seminary" (1840), and the "Missionary Offering," 1843. — See Life and Labors of Mary Lyon, by Edward Hitchcock, D.D., 1851.

Lyon, COL. MATHEW, politician, b. Wicklow Co., Ireland, 1746; d. Spadra Bluff, Ark., 1 Aug. 1822. Emigrating at the age of 13 to N.Y., and unable to pay for his passage, the captain of the ship, in accordance with the custom of the time, assigned him for a sum of money to a farmer in Litchfield Co., Ct., whom he served some years. Becoming a citizen of Vt., he was in 1775 a lieut. in a company of "Green Mountain Boys;" was cashiered for deserting his post in the latter part of the year; was in 1777 temporary paym. of the Northern army; was subsequently serving as commiss.-gen. and as col. of militia; and was in 1778 dep. sec. to the gov., and clerk of the Court of Confiscations. Founding the town of Fairhaven in 1783, he built saw-mills and grist-mills, established a forge, manufactured paper from basswood, and established the Freeman's Library, newspaper. He was 10 years a member of the legisl.; assist. judge of Rutland Co. Court in 1786; M.C. 1797–1801, and had on the floor of Congress a personal difficulty with Roger Griswold, when an unsuccessful attempt was made to expel him; gave the vote that made Jefferson pres.; and being in Oct. 1798 convicted of a libel on Pres. Adams, was confined 4 months in the Vergennes Jail, and fined $1,000, which was paid by his friends. Removing to Ky., he was in its legisl. in 1801–3; was its rep. in Congress in 1803–11; then became bankrupt from the speculation of building gunboats for the war of 1812; and in 1820 was made a factor among the Cherokee Indians in Ark., and was app. territorial delegate to Congress, but did not live to take his seat. His son CHITTENDEN LYON, M.C. from Ky. 1827–35, d. Caldwell Co., Ky., Nov. 1842. Col. L. was rough and impetuous in manner, but was an able debater. — See pamphlet notice of Lyon by Rev. Pliny H. White, 1858.

Lyon, NATHANIEL, brig.-gen vols., b. Ashford, Windham Co., Ct., July 14, 1819; killed at the battle of Wilson's Creek, Mo., Aug. 10, 1861. West Point, 1841. Grand-nephew of Col. Knowlton. Entering the 2d Inf. he disting. himself in the Florida war; took part in the capture of Monterey in 1846; became 1st lieut. Feb. 1847; and, joining Gen. Scott, was present at Vera Cruz and Cerro Gordo; com. his company at Contreras and Churubusco, winning the brevet of capt.; and was wounded in the assault of the Belen Gate, Mexico City. Ordered to California; June 11, 1851, he became capt.; was on active duty in Kansas during the Free-State troubles; and, when the civil war broke out, was placed in com. of the arsenal at St. Louis. This he made secure against surprise; and May 10, with the aid of several thousand "Home Guards," under Cols. Blair and Sigel, broke up the rendezvous of the secessionists at Camp Jackson; brig.-gen. vols. 17 May, 1861; June 1 the com. of the dept. devolved on him. He broke up a Confederate force at Potosi, and caused several important seizures of war matériel destined for Camp Jackson. Gov. Jackson, having called out 50,000 militia to "repel the invasion of the State," left for Booneville on the 14th; Gen. Lyon followed him, defeating the militia on the 17th; he then marched to Springfield. Aug. 2, he defeated the Confederates under McCulloch at Dug Spring. McCulloch having been joined by Gen. Price, thus making a force 4 or 5 times as large as his own, he determined, rather than abandon S. W. Mo., to risk a battle. He accordingly marched on and attacked the enemy on the 10th, at Wilson's Creek; and, after being twice wounded, was leading into action a regt. whose col. had been killed, when he was struck by a minie-ball, and killed. Great honors were paid to his memory. He bequeathed nearly all his property, some $30,000, to the govt. to aid in the preservation of the Union. In 1860, while stationed at Camp Riley, he pub. a series of letters in favor of Abraham Lincoln's election to the presidency, in a local newspaper, since collected in a vol., entitled "The Last Political writings of Gen. Nathaniel Lyon," with a memoir, 1862.

McGee, THOMAS D'ARCY, statesman and orator, b. Carlingford, Ireland, Apr. 13, 1825; assassinated at Ottawa, C., Apr. 7, 1868. Educated at Wexford, where his father held a custom-house office; emig. to Amer. in 1842, and was employed on the Boston press; but returned to his native country when the Young Ireland movement began; joined the staff of the Nation, newspaper, and sought to rouse the Irish people to battle for their rights. On the failure of the movement, McGee evaded the British police, and reached America. Established the American Celt in Boston. Originally an ardent Republican, his views, during the Know-nothing excitement, underwent a change; and, from the period of his removal to Canada, he avowed himself a royalist, and, by letters and addresses, did his utmost to turn the tide of Irish immigration from the U.S. to the New Dominion. His ability and eloquence caused him to be chosen to represent Montreal in 1857. In 1864 he was made pres. of the exec. council; in 1867 minister of agric.; and was chief Canadian commiss. at the first Paris and Dublin exhibitions. He took a prominent part as delegate in all the conferences held to promote the confederation of the Brit. N. Amer. Provinces. His bitter hostility to the Fenian movement probably occasioned his assassination, for which James Whelan, an Irish Fenian, was tried and executed. Among his pubs are "Lives of Irish Writers;" Hist. Sketches of O'Connell and his Friends," 12mo, Bost., 1854; "Canadian Ballads and Occas. Verses," 1858; "History of the Irish Settlers in N.A.," Boston, 1851; "Prot. Reformation in Ireland," 12mo, 1853; "Popular History of Ireland," N.Y., 1862, 2 vols. 8vo; "Catholic Hist. of N. America," 12mo, 1854; "Speeches and Addresses," 1865.

McGill, JAMES, founder of McGill U. Montreal, b. Glasgow, Scotland, Oct. 6, 1744; d. Montreal, Dec. 19, 1813. He came to Canada when quite young, and, engaging in mercantile pursuits, amassed a fortune, of which he made the noblest uses. He was successively a member of parliament, of the legisl., and exec. councils, and rose to the rank of brig.-gen. of militia in the war of 1812. — Morgan.

MacGillivray, ALEXANDER, chief of the Creek Indians, b. Coosa River, near Wetumpka, Ga., ab. 1740; d. Pensacola, Feb. 17, 1793. Son of Lachlan MacGillivray, an Indian trader, by the half-breed dau. of a French officer. He received a good education in New York and Charleston. His father placed him in a counting-house in Savannah; but distaste for trade led him to return to his Indian relatives. He soon took a high position among the united tribes of Creeks and Seminoles, and was their leader during the Amer. Revol., and with his father, who was a col. in the British service, warmly espoused the royal cause. After the war, Alexander, in behalf of the Muscogee confederacy, became the ally of Spain, and a commissary in its service, with the rank and pay of col. He diverted the trade of the Creeks to Pensacola, and long opposed the efforts of the U.S. Govt. to recover it, and obtain the cession of disputed lands on the Oconee. In 1790 he signed a treaty, ceding the territory for a pecuniary consideration, and was, by a secret article, app. agent for the U.S., and brig.-gen. in the army. This treaty lessened his influence with the Creeks; but he succeeded in obtaining an increase of salary and authority from the Spanish Govt. His hospitality and generosity were almost princely. He was a bro.-in-law of LeClerc Milfort, and an uncle of Wm. Weatherford.

Macgregor, JOHN, a British statistician, b. Stornoway, Ross Shire, in 1797; d. Boulogne, April 23, 1857. Placed when young in a commercial house in Canada, he collected the statistics of the resources of the country, pub. in 1832 in his "British America." Returning to Eng., he was in 1840 a sec. to the board of trade, and M.P. for Glasgow in 1847. He established the Royal British Bank; but it failed, and he withdrew to Boulogne. He compiled "The Progress of America from the Discovery by Columbus to 1846;" "Commercial Statistics of America," 5 vols. 1848–50; "Emigration to Brit. America," 8vo, 1829; and left incomplete a "History of the British Empire from the Accession of James I."

McIntosh, GEN. LACHLAN, b. near Inverness, Scotland, March 17, 1725; d. Savannah, Feb. 20, 1806. John More his father, the head of the Borlam branch of the clan McIntosh, with 100 adherents, came to Ga. with Oglethorpe in 1736, and settled at New Inverness in what is now McIntosh Co. He originated the protest made by the colonists to the board of trustees in Eng. against the introduction of African slaves into Ga. Of his sons and grandsons, seven bore commissions in the Revol. army. Made a prisoner by the Spaniards, and sent to St. Augustine, Lachlan was left to the care of his mother at the age of 13. His opportunities of education were few; but, in the study of mathematics and surveying, he received great assistance from Oglethorpe. Arrived at maturity, he went to Charleston, became a friend of Henry Laurens, whose counting-room he entered as clerk. Returning to his friends on the Altamaha, he m., and became a land-surveyor. He acquainted himself with military tactics, and, when the Revol. War began, was first app. col., and Sept. 16, 1776, brig.-gen. Persecuted beyond endurance by his political rival, Button Gwinnett, he pronounced him a scoundrel, and, in the duel which ensued, killed him. He afterwards com. in the Western dept., and led an exped. against the Indians in the spring of 1778, succeeding with a small force in restoring peace on the frontier; returned to Ga. in 1779; and was at the siege and fall of Savannah. He was with Lincoln at Charleston when he was made a prisoner. Member of Congress in 1784. In 1785 he was one of the commiss. to treat with the Southern Indians. — See Nat. Port. Gallery.

McIntosh, MARIA J., authoress, b. Sunbury, Ga., 1803. Her father Major Lachlan McIntosh, son of Col. Wm., and grandson of John More, was a lawyer and soldier. She was educated at the Sunbury Acad.; after 1835 she resided in New York with a married sister, and then with her bro., Capt. James M. McIntosh, U.S.N. She lost her property in the crash of 1837, and, resorting to her pen for support, produced in 1841 her first tale "Blind Alice," under the pseudonyme of "Aunt Kitty." She has since pub. "Jessie Graham;" "Florence Arnott;" "Conquest and Self-Conquest," 1844; "Praise and Principle;" "Woman an Enigma;" "Two Lives, or to Seem and to Be," 1846 (all collected in a single volume in 1847); "Charms and Counter-Charms," 1848; "Donaldson Manor," 1849; "Woman in America," 1850; "The Lofty and the Lowly," 1853; "Violet, or the Cross and the Crown," 1856; "Meta Gray," 1858; "Two Pictures," 1863, &c.

breed warrior, b. Coweta, Ga.; killed May 1, 1825. His father was Capt. Wm. M., a Scotchman; his mother, a native Indian. The son was tall, well-formed, intelligent, and brave. Joining the American forces in 1812, he was highly commended by Gen. Floyd for bravery at the battle of Autossee, in which he was a major; was disting. at the battle of the Horse Shoe, and also in the Florida campaign. His connection with the treaty at the Julian Springs in 1825 was the cause of his being killed by the Indians opposed to a cession of their lands to the U.S. — Ga. Colls. 170.

McKay, Donald, ship-builder, b. Shelburne, N.S., 1809; learned the art in N.Y. City; began business for himself at Newburyport, Ms., and in 1845 removed to East Boston. He built many fast clipper-ships for the Cal. and Australian trade, and 4 Oct. 1853, launched "The Great Republic," of 4,500 tons.

McKean, Thomas, LL.D., jurist and Revol. patriot, b. Chester Co., Pa., March 19, 1734; d. Phila. June 24, 1817. After an academic and professional course of study, he was adm. an atty., and soon obtained the app. of dep. atty.-gen. in the county of Sussex. In 1757 he was adm. to the bar of Pa., and elected clerk of the Assembly; member of the Assembly for the county of New Castle 1762–79. In the Gen. Congress at N.Y. in 1765, he, with Lynch and Otis, framed the address to the British house of commons; and was app. judge of the C. C. P., and of the Orphans' Court for New Castle. In 1771 he was app. coll. of the port of New Castle; member of the Cont. Congress in 1774; and was annually re-elected until Feb. 1783, being the only man who was without intermission a member during the whole period of the war. In 1778 he was one of the convention which framed the Articles of Confederation; in 1781 he was pres. of Congress. In addition to his congressional duties, in 1777 he officiated as pres. of the State of Del; and held from July, 1777, until 1799, the office, and executed the duties, of chief justice of Pa. He was particularly active and useful in promoting the Decl. of Indep., which he signed; and a few days after that event marched with a battalion to Perth Amboy, N.J., to support Washington. He returned to Del. to prepare a constitution for that State, which he drew up in the course of a night, and which was unanimously adopted the next day by the Assembly. At that period, as he relates, he was "hunted like a fox by the enemy:" he was compelled to remove his family five times in a few months; and at length placed them in a little log-house on the banks of the Susquehanna; but they were soon obliged to leave this retreat on account of the Indians. Gov. of Pa. from 1799 to 1808; and in 1790 he was a member of the convention which framed the constitution of Pa. He was highly esteemed for integrity, impartiality, and learning. In politics he was one of the leaders of the republican party; as a member of the convention of Pa., he urged the adoption of the U.S. Constitution.

McKendree, WILLIAM, D.D., bishop M.E. Church, b. King William Co., Va., July 5, 1757; d. Mar. 5, 1835. During the Revol. war he attained the rank of adj. In 1787 he became a Methodist; in 1791 he was made an elder; app. to several offices of importance and trust; was sent to the first general conf.; and was afterward made pres. elder of a new conf. in the Far West. Chosen bishop May 12, 1808, during that year he visited with Bishop Asbury nearly the whole of the U. S. and a part of Canada.

McKenney, COL. THOMAS LORRAINE, author, b. Hopewell, Md., 21 Mar. 1785; d. New York, 20 Feb. 1858. Educated at Wash. Coll., Chestertown, and became a merchant in Georgetown, D.C. App. in 1816 supt. of U.S. trade with the Indian tribes, and in 1824 of the bureau of Indian affairs in the war dept., and in 1826 a special commiss. with Lewis Cass to negotiate a treaty with the Chippeway Indians at Fond du Lac. Author of "Tour to the Lakes, and Treaty of Fond du Lac," 8vo, 1827; "Memoirs Official and Personal," 8vo, 1846; and, with James Hall, "History of Indian Tribes," &c., 3 vols. fol. 1838–44. — Red Book of Mich.

Mackenzie, SIR ALEXANDER, traveller, b. Inverness, Scotland; d. Dalhousie, Mar. 12, 1820. At one time a Canadian merchant engaged in the fur-trade. Previous to commencing his journey across the continent, he passed a year in Eng., acquiring a knowledge of astronomy and navigation. He then returned to Chippewyan, where he had been stationed for 8 years, and June 3, 1789, set out on his exped. At the western part of the Great Slave Lake he entered a river, to which he gave his own name, being then in a track wholly new to Europeans. He followed the course of the stream till the 12th of July, when, the ice opposing further passage, he returned to Fort Chippewyan, where he arrived Sept. 27. 69° 1′ N., was the northern boundary of his voyage. And in Oct. 1792 he undertook a more hazardous exped. to the western coast of N.A., and succeeded in July, 1793, in reaching Cape Menzies, so named by Vancouver, lat. 52° 21′ N., and long. 128° 12′ W. Mackenzie returned to England in 1801, and in the following year was knighted. He pub. with excellent maps "Voyages from Montreal through the Continent of N. America to the Frozen and Pacific Oceans in the Years 1789 and 1793," Lond. 1801.

Mackenzie, ALEXANDER SLIDELL, naval officer and author, b. New York, Apr. 6, 1803; d. Tarrytown, Sept. 13, 1848. Son of John Slidell, a merchant of New York, and bro. of Senator John Slidell, and in 1837 added, at the request of a maternal uncle, his mother's family name, Mackenzie, to his own. He entered the navy Jan. 1, 1815, as a midshipman. At the age of 19 he took command of a merchant-vessel to improve himself in seamanship. Lieut. 13 Jan. 1825; com. Sept. 8, 1841. In 1825 he visited Europe, and pub. his "Year in Spain." After his return home from a three-years' cruise in the Mediterranean in 1833, he pub. a vol. of Popular Essays on Naval Subjects. "The American in England," and "Spain Revisited," were the fruits of a subsequent tour; and in 1836 he pub. an enlarged edition of the "Year in Spain." His cruise in 1842 in the brig "Somers" gave him an unhappy notoriety. A mutiny among the crew, headed by a midshipman, having been discovered, a council of officers was held, which ordered that the three most guilty should suffer death at the yard-arm, which sentence was promptly carried into effect. Individuals censured Lieut. Mackenzie for undue severity; but the tribunals to which he was amenable acquitted him of blame. (See his Defence before the Court-Martial, N. Y., 8vo, 1843.) Ordnance officer under Com. Perry in "The Mississippi" at Vera Cruz; com. the 2d division of art. detached from the fleet in the storming and capture of the city of Tabasco, June 16, 1847. He pub. Lives of Paul Jones, O. H. Perry, and Stephen Decatur.

Mackenzie, CHARLES KENNETH, F.R.S., author, b. Scotland, 1788; d. by the conflagration of the Rainbow Hotel, New York, July 6, 1862. He was a ripe scholar, an excellent linguist, with great and versatile literary attainments, having been a contrib. to the Edinburgh and Quarterly Reviews, and "The Encyclopædia Britannica," and also leading editor of a London daily conservative journal. He was a doctor both of law and medicine. In his youth he was an aide-de-camp of the Duke of Wellington; in 1823 he accomp. to Mexico the British commiss. on the recognition of her independence, and was app. consul for Vera Cruz; in 1825 he was sent consul-gen. to Hayti; and in 1830 was commiss. of arbitration to the mixed commission at Havana. A dispute with the foreign office in Nov. 1834 ended his connection with the British Govt. He had resided in the U S. about 14 years when he died.

Mackenzie, ROBERT SHELTON, M.D., D.C.L. (Oxf. 1844), LL.D. (Glasgow, 1834), journalist, b. Drew's Court, Limerick Co., Ireland, June 22, 1809. Educated at a school in Fermoy, where his father, originally a British officer, was postmaster; at the age of 13 was apprenticed to an apothecary in Cork; passed his medical examination; opened a school in Fermoy; and in 1829 became editor of a journal pub. in Staffordshire, Eng. In 1830–1 he was employed in literary labors in London. Between 1834 and 1851 he was the English corresp. of the N.Y. Evening Star, besides contrib. frequently to Amer. periodicals. In 1847 he was an active member of Lord Brougham's Law Amendment Society. In the latter part of 1852 he came to New York, where for several years he wrote for some of the principal journals; in 1857 he became literary and foreign editor of the Phila. Press. Among his pubs. are "Lays of Palestine," 1829; "Titian," an art novel, 1843; "Partnership en Commandité," 8vo, 1847; "Mornings at Matlock," 1850, a collection of fugitive magazine pieces; Sheil's "Sketches of the Irish Bar," 1854, with memoirs and notes; an edition of the "Noctes Ambrosianæ," with sketches of the contributors and notes, 5 vols. 1854; "Bits of Blarney," 1855; "Dr. Maginns's Writings and others;" "Tressillian and his Friends," 1859; an edition of the "Memoirs of Robert Houdin," 1859; "Life of Charles Dickens," 1870; "Life of Sir Walter Scott," 1871. — Appleton.

Mackenzie, WILLIAM LYON, leader of the Canadian insurgents in 1837–8, b. Springfield, Forfarshire, Scotland, Mar. 12, 1795; d. Toronto, Aug. 28, 1861. At 17 he commenced business, and kept a circulating-library in Ayleth, near Dundee, and afterward went to Eng., where he was a clerk in the employ of Lord Lonsdale. He came to Canada in 1820; was employed as supt. over the works of the Lachine Canal; and was engaged in the book and drug trade in Toronto, with success, until 1823, when he entered upon political life. From May 18, 1824, until 1833, he edited the Colonial Advocate at Niagara, freely criticising the acts of the govt., which made every effort to suppress it; and in 1826 a mob destroyed the office. This riot brought him more prominently into notice; and in 1828 he was chosen to parliament from York Co. For an alleged libel upon the Assembly in his newspaper, he was five times expelled, and as often re-elected. The Assembly, at last, refused to issue the writ for a new election. In May, 1832, he went to Eng. with a petition of grievances to the imperial govt. In 1836 he was the first mayor of Toronto. The rebellion with which his name is so conspicuously connected was quickly subdued; but it awakened the attention of the home govt. to various abuses, and brought about beneficial changes. Outlawed by his govt., he fled to the U. S., where he was arrested, and sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment for a breach of the neutrality laws; and was confined in Monroe Co. jail, Rochester, N.Y. He afterward pub. Mackenzie's Gazette, and was long connected with the N.Y. Tribune. Having received a pardon, he returned to Canada in 1850, and was again a member of the Assembly until 1858. It is generally conceded that he acted from a thoroughly honest motive; and it is unquestionable that he did his share to advance the cause of civil liberty in his adopted country. While in New York he pub. some political pamphlets, one of which (Sketches of Wm. L. Marcy, Jacob Barker, and others, 8vo, 1845), compiled from papers found in the custom-house, professedly exposed the intrigues of several prominent political leaders, and created much excitement. His admirers raised a sum sufficient to purchase him a small annuity and a residence near Toronto. Author of "Sketches of Canada and the U.S.," Lond. 12mo, 1833. — Morgan.

Returning in 1705, he was licensed to officiate on the eastern shore of Md. For preaching in N.Y. Jan. 19, 1707, he was arrested by Gov. Cornbury, and imprisoned two months. He soon after went to Boston, where this sermon was printed. He also pub. "A Narrative" of the affair, which was reprinted in 1755 by Hugh Gaine in N.Y., and in Force's Tracts, v. Cornbury wrote to the lords of trade and the plantations, that Makemie was "a preacher, a doctor of physic, a merchant, an attorney, a counsellor at law, and, which is worst of all, a disturber of governments." In 1692 he pub. in Boston "An Answer to George Keith's Libel on a catechism pub. by F. Makemie;" imprimatur Increase Mather. He possessed learning, energy, talent, and public spirit. — Presb. Ch. in America.

Makin, THOMAS, poet, d. Pa. 1735. He was an early settler of Pa.; was in 1689 usher to George Keith in the Friend's Grammar School, succeeding him as master in 1690. He was for some time clerk of the Prov. Assembly. He pub. two Latin poems in 1728 and 1729, inscribed to James Logan, entitled "Encomium Pennsylvaniæ," and "In Laudes Pennsylvaniæ Poema," extracts from which are in Proud's "History of Pennsylvania."

Malbone, EDWARD G., portrait-painter, b. Newport, R.I., Aug. 1777; d. Savannah, Ga., May 7, 1807. He early displayed a talent for painting, and, while a boy, painted an entire scene for a theatre. At 17 he established himself in Providence as a portrait-painter. Removing to Boston in 1796, he practised there, and in New York and Phila., until, in 1800, he accomp. Allston to Charleston, and the next year to Europe. While in London, Malbone was urged by West, the pres. of the Royal Acad., to remain; but he returned to Charleston in Dec. 1801. He painted miniatures in various places with high repute, until his intense application undermined his health, and, relinquishing his pencil in the summer of 1806, he soon after made a voyage to the W. Indies, from which he derived no benefit. Many of his portraits are owned in Charleston, where he was often employed. His other compositions are marked by agreeable style, and warmth and delicacy of coloring; and he occasionally attempted landscape in oil. One of his finest works, the Hours, represents three beautiful females moving in a circle, — present, past, and future.

Manco Capac I., legislator, and first inca of Peru, was the 12th in ascent from the inca who reigned at the time of the Spanish invasion, in 1532, an interval of ab. 400 years. He is supposed to have been somestranger from a civilized land, who employed the associations of religion to procure an ascendency which enabled him to form a regular govt. He had a long and prosperous reign, and seems justly to have been entitled to rank among the benefactors of mankind by the benevolence of his institutions. — Robertson.

Manco Capac II., inca of Peru; killed 1544. Second son of Huayna Capac, the conqueror of Quito, who d. ab. 10 years after the first arrival of the Spaniards. Manco was, after the taking of Cuzco, placed on the throne. Unwilling to be a puppet in the hands of Pizarro, after in vain petitioning for power to exercise the sovereignty, he fled; was captured and imprisoned, but again escaped; roused the whole nation to arms; and appeared before Cuzco Feb. 1536, with an immense host of Indians. After a siege of 5 months, in which the Spaniards were reduced to extremities, he was compelled, from scarcity of food, to withdraw to the fortress of Tambo, where he was defeated by Almagro, and deserted by most of his warriors. Taking refuge in the Andes, he was for years the terror of the Spaniards, who in vain endeavored to conciliate him. He was killed by a party of Spaniards belonging to the younger Almagro's faction, who, on the defeat of their leader, had taken refuge in the Peruvian camp, and who were in turn massacred by the Indians.

Mandrillon, JOSEPH, a political writer, b. Bourg-en-Bresse, 1742; guillotined Jan. 7, 1794. Having embraced the mercantile profession, he travelled in America and Holland. He settled in Holland; but his opposition to the stadtholder made him unpopular, and he returned to France, where the independence of his character rendered him suspected by Robespierre. He wrote "The American Spectator," 8vo, a work of merit, and "Récherches Philosophiques sur la Découverte de l'Amerique," Amsterdam, 8vo, 1784.

Marion, Francis, brig.-gen., a celebrated partisan officer in the Revol. war, b. near Georgetown, S.C., 1732; d. Feb. 27, 1795. At the age of 16 he entered on board a vessel bound to the W. Indies; but she foundered on her passage out, and the crew took to the boat. Destitute of water or provisions, several died of hunger before they were rescued. He then engaged in agriculture until 1759, when he was a lieut. in Gov. Lyttleton's exped. against the Cherokees; and in Apr. 1761 was a capt. in that of Col. Grant. He led the forlorn hope in the battle of Etchoee, and was one of the few who escaped. When the Revol. war began, he was elected to the Prov. Congress; made a capt. in the first corps raised in S.C.; served as major in the defence of Fort Moultrie; was lieut.-col. (com. of his regt.) at Savannah and at the siege of Charleston, where, fracturing his leg by accident, he escaped the captivity to which the garrison was eventually forced to submit. App. a brig.-gen. in 1780, he commenced his partisan career as soon as he recovered from the fracture of his leg, with only 16 men. Fertile in stratagem, he struck, unperceived, and, retiring to those hidden retreats in the morasses of Pedee and Black River, he placed his corps out of the reach of his foe. The country from Camden to the sea-coast, between the Pedee and Santee, was the theatre of his exertions. Soon after the defeat of Gates (Aug. 20, 1780), he captured a British guard of 90, and rescued 150 Continental prisoners. He surprised Maj. Gainey, an English partisan officer of reputation, and took his whole party. He next attacked Capt. Barfield's party of Tories, killing or capturing 30 out of 49. He routed with great loss a large body of Tories at Shepherd's Ferry, another under Col. Tynes at the forks of Black River, and succeeded in escaping from Tarleton after a long and hot pursuit. Watson, Gainey, Tynes, McIllraith, Tarleton, and Doyle were at different times sent to crush him, but were either foiled by his strategy, or disgracefully defeated. In 1781 he was joined by Lee's Legion, captured a number of the enemy's forts, and participated in the battle of Eutaw. After the war he m. Mary Videau, a lady of wealth; resided in his native parish of St. John's, and was returned to the State senate. In 1790 he was a member of the State Const. Conv. He was small in stature, thin, neither pleasing in visage, nor captivating in his manners, and was reserved and silent. — See Lives of Marion by P. Horry and M. L. Weems, and by W. G. Simms.

in Sept. They proceeded to Green Bay, through Fox River, to the Wisconsin, and thence by Portage to the Mpi., which they descended to the Arkansas. Returning, they ascended the Illinois, proceeded thence across to Lake Michigan, to Green Bay, and to the mission, without serious accident. During this exped. he prepared a map of the route. Having promised the Kaskaskia Indians to return and preach to them, after being detained a year by sickness, he set out in Oct. 1674, with two white men and a number of savages, for the village of Kaskaskia. After wintering at the Portage in the Chicago, he reached Kaskaskia, Apr. 8, 1675, and at once began a mission by erecting an altar, and celebrating the festival of Easter; but, conscious that his end was approaching, he soon attempted to return to Mackinaw, but died near the mouth of a river on the east shore of Lake Michigan, which still bears his name. "He was of a cheerful, joyous disposition, playful even in his manner, and universally beloved." His narrative was pub. at Paris in 1681, in Thevenot's "Recueil de Voyages." This account, as well as a journal of the missionary's last exped., is in Shea's "Discovery and Exploration of the Mpi. Valley," N.Y. 1852.

"Society in America." She also pub. in 1838 her "Retrospect of Western Travel;" "History of England during the 30-Years' Peace," 2 vols. 1850; and "Biog. Sketches," 1869. Besides her numerous publications, she is a frequent contrib. to some of the leading magazines and periodicals.

Martyr, Peter, See Anghiera.

Mascarene, Jean Paul, acting gov. of Nova Scotia in 1740–9, b. Castras, Languedoc, France, 1684; d. Boston, Jan. 22, 1760. Of a Huguenot family. Paul, at the age of 11, expatriated himself to Geneva, where he was educated by Mr. Rapin. He went to Eng., where he was naturalized in 1706; entered the army as a lieut. the same year; came with the English troops to America in 1711, and was employed in Nova Scotia, where he was by degrees advanced to the rank of col., and was also lieut.-gov. and com.-in-chief. Made a maj.-gen. in 1758. App. a councillor in 1720, and many years the senior on the board. Ab. 1720 he transmitted to the plantation office a complete description of the province, with suggestions for its settlement and defence. In 1744 he defended Annapolis, and beat off the French under Du Vivier. With the govs. of Ms. and N.H. he negotiated with the Indians the treaty of 1725.

Mason, Armistead Thomson, U.S. senator 1815–17, b. Loudon Co., Va., 1787; killed in a duel with Col. McCarty, Feb. 5, 1819. Wm. and M. Coll. 1807. Son of Senator Stevens Thomson Mason. Was a farmer by occupation; a col. in the war of 1812, and ably defended Norfolk; and was subsequently a brig.-gen. of Va. militia. His only child, Stevens Thomson, a capt. of the mounted rifles, fell mortally wounded at Cerro Gordo. In consequence of a political dispute with his relative John McCarty, they fought a duel at Bladensburg with muskets. His corresp. with his antagonist, which was pub., manifested the most malignant ferocity.

Mason, Charles; d. Phila. 1787. Assist. of Dr. Bradley at the Roy. Observatory, Greenwich. He pub. Mayer's "Lunar Tables Improved," Lond. 4to, 1789; and contrib. astronomical papers to "Phila. of Iowa 1848–51; judge of Des Moines Co. Court 1851–2; U.S. commissioner of patents 1853–7. — Cullum.

Mason, EBENEZER PORTER, astronomer, b. Washington, Ct., Dec. 7, 1819; d. near Richmond, Va., Dec. 24, 1840. Y.C. 1839. Though only 21 at the time of his death, young Mason had attained distinguished rank as a mathematician and astronomer. In the summer of 1840 he assisted in exploring and fixing the disputed boundary between Me. and Canada. In the short interval between his graduation and death, he found time, in narrow circumstances, with rapidly-failing health, to pursue and pub. his "Observations on Nebulæ," a paper which gained the admiration of Sir J. Herschel. His Life and Writings were pub. in 1842 by Prof. Olmstead.

Mason, ERSKINE, D.D. (Col. Coll. 1837), minister of Bleecker-st. Church, New York. 1830–51, b. N.Y. City, 16 Apr. 1805; d. May 14, 1851. Dick. Coll. 1823. Son of Dr. John M. Mason. Ord. Presb. church, 20 Oct. 1826; installed over the church at Schenectady 3 May, 1827; prof. of Eccles. Hist. Union Theol. Sem. 1836–42. His Memoir, by Rev. Wm. Adams, is prefixed to his sermons on practical subjects, entitled "A Pastor's Legacy," 8vo, 1853. — Sprague.

Mason, FRANCIS, D.D. (B.U. 1853), clergyman and missionary, b. York, Eng., Apr. 2, 1799. He was a shoemaker's apprentice; at 19 emig. to Phila.; settled at Canton, Ms., in 1825; studied at the Theol. Sem., Newton, Ms., in 1827; and in May, 1830, having been ord., sailed with his wife for Calcutta as a missionary of the Baptists to the Karens. Acquiring the language, he wrote its first book, "The Sayings of the Elders." He prepared Pali and Burmese grammars, and acquired many of the Oriental languages. In 1853 he pub. a Karen translation of the Bible. He was also medical adviser to this tribe, and, having studied medicine, pub. a small work on materia medica and pathology in one of the Karen dialects. Many years editor of the Morning Star, a Karen monthly, in both the Sgan and Pwo dialects. Member of many literary and scientific bodies. His English writings are "Report of the Tavoy Mission Society;" "Life of Kothabyn," the Karen apostle; "Memoir of Mrs. Helen M. Mason," 1847; "Memoir of "San Quala," 1850; and "Burmah, its People and Natural Productions," 1852, enlarged edition, 1861; d. Rangoon, Mar. 3, 1874.

Mason, GEORGE, statesman, b. Doeg's Neck, Fairfax Co., Va., 1726; d. Oct. 7, 1792. His ancestor Col. George, an M. P. in the reign of Charles I., subsequently an officer in the army of Charles II., after the defeat at Worcester in 1651, escaped to America, and landed at Norfolk, Va. George, after his marriage with Ann Eilbeck, built Gunston Hall on the banks of the Potomac, where he resided till his death. In 1769 he drew up the non-importation resolutions, which were presented by Washington in the Va. Assembly, and unanimously adopted. Against the assertion by the British parliament of the right of taxation, Mason wrote a tract, entitled "Extracts from the Va. Charters, with some Remarks upon them." At a meeting of the people of Fairfax, July 18, 1774, Mason presented a series of 24 resolutions, which reviewed the whole ground of controversy, recommended a congress of the Colonies, and urged the policy of non-intercourse with the mother-country. They were sanctioned by the Va. conv. of Aug., and substantially adopted by the first Gen. Congress on the 20th of Oct. He was a member of the com. of safety; and in May, 1776, in the Va. convention, drafted the decl. of rights and the constitution of Va., which were adopted by a unanimous vote. His ability as a debater, as well as his liberal spirit, was eminently displayed in the first legisl. of Va., upon his measure for the repeal of all the old disabling acts, and for legalizing all modes of worship. In 1777 he was elected to the Cont. Congress; in 1787 he was a member of the convention to frame the U.S. Constitution; took a leading part in its debates, and favored the election of the pres. directly by the people, and for a term of 7 years, with ineligibility afterward. He spoke with great energy against the clause of the Constitution which prohibited the abolition of the slave-trade till 1808, declaring that slavery was a source of national weakness and demoralization, and it was therefore essential that the Gen. Govt. should have power to prevent its increase. Some of his propositions were defeated; and he refused his signature to the instrument. In the Va. convention, with Henry, he opposed its ratification, unless with certain amendments, some of which were afterwards adopted by Congress and the State. Elected first U.S. senator from Va., he declined, and devoted the rest of his life to study, and to hunting and fishing, of which he was extremely fond. Jefferson says of him, "He was a man of the first order of wisdom, of expansive mind, profound judgment, cogent in argument, learned in the lore of our former constitution, and earnest for the republican change on Democratic principles."

Mason, GEORGE C., editor of the Newport Mercury, b. Newport, R.I., 1820. Author of "Newport Illustrated," 1854; "George Ready," a story for boys, 1857; "The Application of Art to Manufactures," 12mo, 1858. — Allibone.

Mason, JAMES L., brev. lieut.-col. U.S.A., b. Providence, R.I., 1817; d. San Francisco, Cal., Sept. 5, 1853. West Point, 1836. Son of Maj. Milo Mason. Lieut. of engr. July, 1836; capt. 24 Apr. 1847; brev. major for gallantry at Contreras and Churubusco; brev. lieut.-col. for El Molino del Rey, Sept. 8, 1847, where he was severely wounded; and was superintending the construction of fortifications at San Francisco at the time of his death. He was long in charge of the construction of the fortifications of Fort Adams; and was a skilful and scientific engineer. Author of "Analytical Investigation of the Resistance of Piles to Superincumbent Pressure," 1850, and of various milit. and scient. reports, 1836–53.

Mason, JAMES MURRAY, senator, b. Analosta Island, Fairfax Co., Va., 3 Nov. 1798; d. near Alexandria, Va., 29 Apr. 1871. U. of Pa. 1818. Grandson of George, and son of Gen. John, who d. Clermont 19 Mar. 1849, a. 82. He studied law at Wm. and Mary Coll.; began practice in 1820; was elected to the h. of delegates in 1826, and twice re-elected; M.C. in 1837–9; and U.S. senator from 1847, until expelled in July, 1861, for taking part in the Rebellion. He was a leading proslavery senator, and was chairm. of the com. on foreign relations. He served in the Confed. congress; was app. with John Slidell a commiss. to Eng., and was captured in the British mail-packet "Trent," by Capt. Wilkes, 8 Nov. 1861, in the Bahama Channel, and confined in Fort Warren, Boston harbor, until released on demand of the British Govt. 2 Jan. 1862. Returning to Eng., the commissioners afterward resided some time in Paris, where their reception was very friendly. Mr. Mason was the author of the Fugitive-Slave Law of 1850.

Mason, JEREMIAH, LL.D. (H.U. 1817), lawyer, b. Lebanon, Ct., Apr. 27, 1768; d. Boston, Oct. 14, 1848. Y.C. 1788. Descended from Capt. John Mason of Ct. His maternal ancestor was Rev. James Fitch. His father, Col. Jeremiah, Revol. off., com. a comp. of minute-men at the siege of Boston, and d. Lebanon 1813. The son studied law; was adm. to the Vt. bar in June, 1791; and began to practise in Westmoreland, N. H. adjoining Walpole; but in 1794 removed to Walpole, and in 1797 to Portsmouth. In 1802 he was app. atty.-gen., and soon became the acknowledged head of his profession in the State. U.S. senator 1813–17; member of the N.H. legisl. during several sessions, in which he took a leading share in the revision of the State code. He draughted the resolutions and report of the legisl. on the Va. resolutions touching the Mo. Compromise. In Apr. 1832 he removed to Boston, where, until the age of 70, he was extensively retained in important causes. He was personally little known out of New England; but his name and presence were familiar to every lawyer of his own and the adjoining States; and nothing could exceed the respect, and almost terror, that was felt at the bar for the acuteness, rapidity, and vigor of his mind. Mr. Webster said of him, "I am bound to say, that of my own professional discipline and attainments, whatever they may be, I owe much to that close attention to the discharge of my duties, which I was compelled to pay for 9 successive years, from day to day, by Mr. Mason's efforts and arguments at the same bar. . . . The characteristics of his mind, as I think, were real greatness, strength, and sagacity. He was great through strong sense and sound judgment."

Mason, CAPT. JOHN, founder of N.H., b. King's Lynn, Norfolk Co., Eng.; d. Lond. Dec. 1635. Buried in Westminster Abbey, Lond. In 1610 he had charge of a naval exped. sent by King James to subdue a rebellion in the Hebrides; in 1616 he went to Newfoundland as gov., surveyed the island, and made an accurate map of it, which was pub. Lond. 1626. He also wrote a description of Newfoundland, pub. Edinb. 1620. In 1617 he explored the coast of N.E.; Mar. 9, 1622, he obtained from the Great Council a grant of a tract of land on the seacoast between Naumkeag and Merrimack Rivers, called Mariana; Aug. 10, 1622, jointly with Sir F. Gorges, he procured a patent for a tract of land on the seacoast, between the Merrimack and Sagadahoc Rivers, called the Province of Maine; early in 1623 he sent a colony to settle on the w. banks of the Piscataqua River, the beginning of the first settlement of that region. Treas. and paym. of the king's armies during the war with Spain in 1624–9. Nov. 7, 1629, he took from the council for N.E. a patent for a tract of land on the seacoast, between the Merrimack and the Piscataqua Rivers, called New Hampshire; and Nov. 17, 1629, took with Gorges a patent for a tract embracing Lake Champlain and the country thereabouts, called Laconia; in 1630 he sent additional colonists to the Piscataqua; and, in the autumn of 1631, Mason, Gorges, and others formed a partnership in Lond. for the purpose of trade and settlement there; in 1632 he became a member of the Great Council for N.E., and soon after vice-pres.; was ab. this time app. capt. of the South Sea castle, a fortress at the entrance of Portsm. harbor, Eng.; was judge of the courts in Hampshire in 1635; was a commiss. to visit annually all the forts and castles in Eng.; in Oct. he was app. vice-adm. of N.E., and, while preparing to come hither to assume the duties of his office, fell sick and d. Mason's heirs sold their rights to the province of N.H. to Samuel Allen in 1691. Col. JOHN TUFTON MASON, a lineal descendant, sold all his rights (29 Jan. 1746) for £1,500 to 12 gentlemen of Portsm. known as the Masonian proprietors. — C. W. Tuttle's Life of Capt. John Mason now in preparation.

Mason, CAPT. JOHN, soldier, b. Eng. ab. 1600; d. Norw., Ct., Jan. 30, 1672. He served in the Netherlands under Fairfax, who esteemed him so highly as to invite him by letter to join his standard in the civil war. Mason was one of the first settlers of Dorchester in 1630, but removed to Windsor ab. 1635. In May, 1637, he led a force of 90 whites, and several hundred Indians, under Uncas and Miantonomoh, against the Pequot fort at Mystic. Attacking them in the early morning of the 26th, they were surprised: an entrance was effected; a hand-to-hand conflict ensued; the torch was applied; 600 Indians perished; and the strength of this formidable tribe was broken. Mason was soon after app. maj.-gen. of the Ct. forces, continuing till his death; was a magistrate from 1642 till May, 1668, and dep. gov. from May, 1660, till May, 1670. After the Pequot war he removed to Saybrook, at the request of its settlers, and for the defence of the Colony, whence, in 1659, he removed to Norwich. Mason was tall and portly, equally disting. for courage and vigor. At the request of the Gen. Court, he drew up and published a history of the Pequot war, reprinted in Increase Mather's Relation of Troubles by the Indians, 1677; it was also repub., with notes by Prince, in 1736, 12mo. — See Life by Geo. E. Ellis, in Sparks's Amer. Biog., new ser. iii.

Mason, JOHN, D.D. (N. J. Coll. 1786), Presb. minister, b. Scotland, 1734; d. N.Y. Apr. 19, 1792. At the age of 24 he taught logic and moral philos. in the theol. sem. of the Antiburghers at Abernethy, by whom he was ordained; and took the pastoral charge of a cong. in Cedar St., New York, on his arrival in 1761. He was a man of great learning, and accurate and mature scholarship.

Mason, JOHN MITCHELL, D.D. (U. of Pa. 1804), divine, b. N.Y. City, Mar. 19, 1770; d. there Dec. 26, 1829. Col. Coll. 1789. Son of the preceding. He studied at the U. of Edinburgh, but was recalled, on his father's death in 1792, to succeed him in the ministry. By his efforts a theol. sem. was established in N.Y. in 1804, of which he was app. prof. of theol.; in 1806 he projected the Christian's Magazine, in which he carried on a controversy with Bishop Hobart. Resigning his pastoral charge in 1810, with the purpose of forming a new cong., he preached a while in a Presb. church-edifice, and, having established more intimate relations between the two congs. than were believed by some to be authorized by the constitution of the Associate Ref. Church, the subject was brought before the synod at Phila. in 1811, and occasioned Dr. Mason's "Plea for Sacramental Communion on Catholic Principles." Provost of Col. Coll. in 1811–16; impaired health caused him to visit Europe, where he travelled extensively; returning in 1817, he was from 1821 to 1824 pres. of Dick. Coll.; in 1822 he connected himself with the Presb. Church. He was celebrated for his eloquence. A collection of his works was edited by his son, Rev. E. Mason, 4 vols. 8vo, N.Y. 1832 and 1849. His orations of the most general interest were on the death of Washington and of Hamilton. Memoirs, with some of his Correspondence, was pub. by his son-in-law, J. Van Vechten, D.D., 2 vols. 8vo, 1856.

Mason, JOHN Y., LL.D. (U. of N. C.), statesman, b. Greensville, Va., Apr. 18, 1799; d. Paris, Oct. 3, 1859. U. of N.C. 1816. Mason, LOWELL, Mus. Doc. (U. of N.Y. 1855), musical teacher and composer, b. Medfield, Ms., Jan. 8, 1792. He commenced teaching very young; removed to Savannah, Ga., in 1812; and in 1821 pub. the "Boston Handel and Haydn Collection of Church Music;" he removed to Boston in 1827; devoted himself to the musical instruction of children, and the introduction of vocal music into the public schools; associating himself with G. J. Webb, vocal music received a new and extraordinary impulse in Boston and throughout New England; the Boston Academy of Music was established; and "Teachers' Institutes," for the training of teachers and leaders of choirs, were generally established. His was the first musical degree ever conferred by an Amer. coll. He has been a frequent contrib. to the Musical Review and other periodicals; has pub. many juvenile collections of music and glee books, and 20 sacred and church music books, with the assistance of Mr. Webb: these works contain some pieces of his own composition. His sons, under the style of "Mason Bros.," carry on an extensive publish. business in N.Y. City; d. Orange, N.J., Aug. 11, 1872.

Mason, RICHARD B., brig.-gen. U.S.A., b. Va.; d. Jefferson Barracks, Mo., July 25, 1850. Grandson of George Mason. Lieut. 8th Inf. Sept. 2, 1817; capt. of the Pilgrims, dwindled, from disease, to barely 300. March 16, 1621, he appeared before the infant settlement at Plymouth, with 60 of his warriors, armed and painted, for the purpose of forming a friendly league with the whites. Gov. Carver, in behalf of the Colony, concluded with the Indians a treaty of peace, kept sacredly for 50 years. In March, 1623, he was visited, while sick, by Edward Winslow, and, grateful for his attentions, revealed a plot for the destruction of the Plymouth settlers. He resided within the limits of Warren, R.I., near a spring which still bears his name. Roger Williams, while on his way to Providence, was for several weeks his guest at this place. Massasoit was just, humane, and honest, never breaking his word, and constantly endeavoring to imbue his people with a love of peace. Morton, in his "Memorial," says he was "a portly man in his best years, grave of countenance, spare of speech." His second son Pometacom, called by the colonists King Philip, who ultimately became sachem, in the vain endeavor of putting a stop to the encroachments of the whites, inaugurated the bloody contest known as Philip's War.

Massie, Gen. Nathaniel, b. Goochland Co., Va., Dec. 28, 1763; d. Paint Creek Falls, O., Nov. 13, 1813. Son of Maj. Nathaniel, a farmer. He entered the Revol. army at the age of 17; afterwards studied surveying; emigrated to the West in the fall of 1783, locating himself in Ky., but removed to Manchester, Ohio, in 1790, pursuing the occupation of a surveyor. In 1796 he laid out Chillicothe from his own land. He was actively engaged in the early Indian wars of the North-west; became col. and afterwards gen. of the militia of O.; was a delegate to the convention for framing a State constitution in 1802; then to the senate, of which he was chosen speaker; and was often a member of the legisl.; a candidate for gov. of the State in 1807, and declared duly elected, but he immediately resigned.

Massey, Rt. Hon. Eyre, Lord Clarina, a Brit. gen., b. Ireland, May 24, 1719; d. May 17, 1804, at Bath. He entered young into the service, and was wounded at the battle of Culloden in 1745; was at the head of the grenadiers who stormed and took the Moro Castle, Havana, where he was again wounded; also at the taking of Martinique. He was one of the last of Wolfe's companions at Quebec; captured Fort Oswegachie in Aug. 1760; and was a brig.-gen. during the Revol. war, commanding at Halifax, N.S.; made an Irish peer Dec. 27, 1800.

Masterman, Stillman, physicist, b. Weld, Me., 28 Jan. 1831; d. there 19 July, 1863. With but a scanty education he applied all his leisure to acquisitions in natural science while working on a farm. His "Observations on Thunder and Lightning," in Smithsonian Reports for 1855, give the results of 304 observations in 1850–4. He was an accurate and faithful observer, and contrib. nearly 20 papers to the Smithsonian Reports, the Amer. Journal of Science, and the Astronomical Journal.

Mather, Cotton, D.D. (Glasg. 1710), F.R.S., the most noted of early N. Eng. divines; b. Boston, Feb. 12, 1663; d. there Feb. 13, 1728. Son of Increase Mather, and grandson of John Cotton. He was trained for Harvard by the learned Ezekiel Cheever, and was a precocious student, graduating in 1678 with extraordinary proficiency. Employed several years in teaching; ord. minister of the North Church in Boston, as colleague with his father, May 13, 1684. He carried the doctrine of special providence to excess. A firm believer in witchcraft, he entered vigorously upon the persecutions of his day in N. Eng., in which he was chiefly instrumental, honestly believing he was doing God service by witch-hunting. His "Memorable Providences relating to Witchcraft" app. in 1689. 20 executions took place at Salem in 1692. His "Wonders of the Invisible World" (1692) gives an account of the witchcraft trials. Even after the publication of Robert Calef's reply, "More Wonders of the Invisible World" (Lond. 1700), Mather made no retraction of his former judgments or convictions. In other respects, the memory of Mather deserves to be held in esteem. When the new discovery of inoculation for the small-pox, which he was the first to introduce, came up, Mather set himself against the popular outcry, and on the side of reform. The great Franklin, in his Autobiography, acknowledges his obligations to Dr. Mather's "Essays to Do Good." He was one of the first to employ the press extensively in the dissemination of tracts; he early lifted his voice in favor of temperance; he preached and wrote for sailors; he instructed negroes; and he was a devoted historiographer of his country; besides discharging the sacred duties of his profession. The catalogue of his printed works, enumerated by his son Samuel at the close of his Memoir of his father, numbers 382, bearing date from 1686 to 1727. His great work is the "Magnalia Christi Americana" (Lond. fol. 1702). The 2d Amer. ed., with introd. and notes by Rev. Thos. Robbins, D.D., and translations of the quotations by L. F. Robinson, 2 vols. 8vo, 1855, contains a Memoir of Mather by S. G. Drake. Among his other works are "The Christian Philosopher," and "The Psalterium Americanum," 1718, an attempt to improve the careless version of the Psalms then current, by a translation exactly conformed to the original, and written in blank verse; "Life of Increase Mather," 8vo, 1724; "Mirabilia Dei," 1719; "Ratio Disciplinæ," and "Directions to a Candidate for the Ministry," 1726. — Duyckinck; Allibone.

Mather, Increase, D.D. (H. U. 1692), a learned divine and author, b. Dorchester, Ms., June 21, 1639; d. Aug. 23, 1723. H.U. 1656; Dublin U. 1658. Son of Rev. Richard. He spent some years in Eng., a part of the time as a preacher, and, returning to Boston ab. Sept. 1, 1661, began to preach at the North Church, though not ord. there until May 27, 1664. He was pres. of H.U. from June 11, 1685, to Sept. 6, 1701. A member of the synod of 1679 and 1680, he drew up the result which was adopted. He was the first upon whom was conferred in this country the degree of D.D.; he strenuously opposed the surrender of the charter of Ms.; went to Eng. in Apr. 1688, as its agent for redress of grievances; and returned to Boston, May 14, 1692, with a new charter, which gave to Mather the nomination of the gov., lieut.-gov., and the council. He was one of the few who opposed the violent measures toward those accused of witchcraft in 1692, and wrote a treatise on the subject. He was a man of great industry, learning, and usefulness. His wife was Maria, dau. of Rev. John Cotton. Author of "The History of the War with the Indians," 1676; "A Relation of Troubles of N.E. from the Indians," 1677 (both repub. with notes and introd. by S. G. Drake); "Cometographia, or a Discourse concerning Comets," 1683; "Remarkable Providences," 1684; "Several Papers relating to the State of N.E.," 1690; "The Revolution Justified." A list of 92 of his pubs. is in the N. E. H. and G. Reg. ii. pp. 23, 24.

Mather, Moses, D.D. (N. J. Coll. 1791), clergyman, a descendant of Richard, b. Lyme, Ct., Feb. 23, 1719; d. Darien, Ct., Sept. 21, 1806. Y. C. 1739. 14 June, 1744, he was installed over the Cong. church at Darien, Ct., where he remained till his death. He warmly espoused the cause of the Colonies in the Revolutionary war; and was twice taken by the British and Tories, carried to New York, and confined in the Provost Prison. He pub. a Reply to Dr. Bellamy on the Half-way Covenant; "Infant Baptism Defended," 1759; and was the author of a posthumous work, "A Systematic View of Divinity," 12mo, 1813.

Mather, Richard, minister of Dorchester, b. Lowton, Lancash., Eng., 1596; d. Dorchester, Ms., Apr. 22, 1669. Son of Thomas. Adm. a student at Oxford in May, 1818, but soon after became the minister of Toxteth, until silenced for non-conformity in 1634. In May, 1635, he left Eng.; arrived at Boston Aug. 17; and was settled, Aug. 23, 1636, over the church in Dorchester, where he spent the remainder of his life. He was prominent in every synod in N. E. from his arrival until his death. In 1646 he assisted Eliot and Welde in making the N. E. version of the Psalms. His model of church-discipline presented to the synod of 1648 was generally adopted. He pub. in 1639 the Discourse about the Church Covenant, and the Answer to 32 Questions; a treatise of Justification, 1652; and prepared for the press an elaborate defence of the churches of N. E. His son Nathaniel, minister in London, of eminent piety and learning, b. Lancashire, Eng., 20 Mar. 1630, d. London, 26 July, 1697. H.U. 1647. — See Life and Death of R. M., by Inc. Mather, 4to, 1670; Journal (from orig. MS. in their archives) in Colls. Dorch. Antiq. and Hist. Soc., No. 3.

Mauduit Duplessis, THOMAS ANTOINE, Chev. de, a disting. French soldier, b. Hennebon, France, Sept. 12, 1753; d. St. Domingo, Mar. 4, 1791. Descended from a family noble, and disting. in arms. At the age of 12 he ran away from college to visit the fields of Marathon, Thermopylæ, &c. On returning to his parents, he presented, in excuse for his conduct, the plans, drawn by his own hand, of the most famous places which he had visited. In 1779 he was capt. in the art. regt. of Toul. He served in America, attaining, by his talents and courage, marks of particular consideration. As vol. aide to Gen. Knox, and as engineer and officer of art., he was of great service both in constructing and defending Fort Mercer at Red Bank. He displayed great bravery at the battles of Brandywine and Germantown; made lieut.-col. Nov. 20, 1777; at Monmouth he served the art. of Greene's division with skill and success, and was disting. at Yorktown. After his return to France, he became, in 1787, col. of the regt. of Port-au-Prince, which was stationed at St. Domingo; where the brave Mauduit, inflexible in his opposition to the revol. spirit which began to manifest itself in their midst, finally fell a sacrifice to their fury.

Maurepas (mōr'-pä'), JEAN FRED. PHELYPEAUX, Count de, French statesman, b. Versailles, 1701; d. Nov. 21, 1781. Grandson of the Chancellor Pontchartrain. Metcalfe, GEN. THOMAS, statesman, b. Fauquier Co., Va., Mar. 20, 1780; d. Nicholas Co., Ky., Aug. 18, 1855. In his youth his parents emigrated to Fayette, Ky., where he received a few months' schooling; became a stone-cutter at the age of 16, and devoted all his leisure to study. In 1809 the prospect of a war with Eng. occasioned his first appearance as a public speaker; in 1813 he com. a company at the battle of Fort Meigs, distinguishing himself greatly; and, while absent on this campaign, was elected to the legisl., receiving within 13 of the entire vote of the county; after serving there several years, he was M.C. 1819–29; gov. 1828–32; State senator 1834, and U.S. senator 1848–9; pres. of the Board of Internal Improvement in 1840. He was the friend and follower of Henry Clay, and delighted in the appellation, — having reference to his occupation of a stone-mason, — the 'Old Stone Hammer." In Congress and the executive chair, Gov. M. greatly disting. himself by his ability and firmness.

Miantonomo, Sachem of the Narragansetts; d. Sept. 1643. He was the nephew and successor of Canonicus, and assumed the govt. in 1636; making in that year a treaty with the English at Boston. He was the friend and benefactor of the R.I. settlers, to whom he gave their territory. In 1638 he entered into an agreement with Uncas, Sachem of the Mohegans, not to make war upon one another without first appealing to the English. Cited in 1642, upon mere rumor of intended hostilities, to appear at Boston before the gov. and council, he promptly appeared, declared his innocence, and called upon the English to produce his accusers. None appearing, he was dismissed with honor. Gov. Winthrop, in his Journal, testifies to the respect in which the ability of this great chief was held. The rivalry between the Mohegans and Narragansetts, which it was the policy of the English to foment, produced its inevitable result. Driven by the insults and injuries of the unprincipled Uncas, he attacked him, but was defeated, and made prisoner, and, by the advice and consent of the English magistrates and elders, was executed. Brave and magnanimous, he was doubtless the most able of the Indians of New England.

Micconopy (Pond-King), head chief of the Seminoles; d. Fort Gibson, Ark., Jan. 1849, a. ab. 63. He com. in person at Dade's defeat, and with Osceola at the Onithlacoochie in 1836, but was opposed to the war, and surrendered in Dec. 1837.

Michaux, ANDRÉ, botanist, b. Sartory, near Versailles, Mar. 7, 1746; d. Madagascar, Nov. 13, 1802. He devoted himself to agric. pursuits; but the early loss of his wife changed his career. In 1780 he made a botanical excursion to Spain, and in 1782 to Persia. In 1785 he was sent to America for the purpose of sending out trees and shrubs for the establishment at Rambouillet; made botanical excursions in various parts of the continent; and established gardens in Bergen Co., N.J., and near Charleston, S.C. In 1796 he returned to Europe; was shipwrecked on the coast of Holland, but saved the greater part of his valuable collection, and, on his arrival at Paris, found that few of the 60,000 stocks which he had sent out to Rambouillet had escaped the ravages of the Revol. In 1800 he was attached to the exped. of Baudin to New Holland. Author of "Histoire des Chênes de l'Amérique," 1801; and "Flora Boreali Americana," 2 vols. 8vo, 1803. His son FRANÇOIS ANDRÉ (b. 1770, d. Oct. 23, 1855), who accomp. his father in most of his voyages, in 1802 made, by order of the French govt., a voyage to Amer. to examine the productions of the States beyond the Alleghanies. In 1804 he pub. "A Journey to the West of the Alleghany Mountains;" to which was added "A Memoir on the Naturalization of the Forest-Trees of N. Amer.," &c. In 1806 he was again sent to collect such seeds as he thought might be successfully introduced into France. His "N. Amer. Sylva," transl. by Hillhouse, with notes by J. J. Smith, was pub. 3 vols. 8vo, Phila. 1850.

Middleton, CHRISTOPHER, an English arctic navigator; d. Jan. 24, 1770. He sailed from Eng. in May, 1741; and, after having passed the winter at the entrance of Churchill's River in Hudson Bay, he proceeded to Wager River, and penetrated towards the west as far as 88 degrees. He then steered to the northwest, and reached a bay, which he called Repulse Bay, in consequence of being prevented by the land and ice from making farther progress. On the 9th of Aug. he sailed back to Eng., where a violent controversy took place between him and Arthur Dobbs, a gentleman of fortune, at whose instance Middleton had undertaken the exped. Further researches vindicated the reputation of Middleton, who was, in consequence, presented with a medal, and elected a member of the Royal Society.

Middleton, HENRY, statesman, son of Arthur the signer, b. 1771; d. Charleston, S.C., 14 June, 1846. Member of the legisl. 1801–10; gov. 1810–12; M.C. in 1815–19; and minister to Russia 1820–31. A man of great liberality. His son HENRY, b. Paris, 1797 (West Point, 1815), studied law, and was adm. to the Charleston bar in 1822, but never practised. He pub. "The Government and the Currency," 1850, and many pamphlets on politics, polit. economy, &c.

Montezuma I., the greatest of the Mexican monarchs; d. 1471. He ascended the throne ab. 1436; was victorious over many of the Mexican tribes, and added numerous provinces to his empire.

Montezuma II., the last of the Aztec emperors, b. ab. 1480; killed June 30, 1520. In 1519, when Cortes arrived on the coast, and expressed his intention of visiting the emperor in his capital, Montezuma sent him a rich present, but forbade his farther advance. His despotic govt. had procured him many enemies, who willingly joined Cortes, and assisted him in his progress to Mexico; and he assigned quarters to the Spaniards in the town of Cholula, where he plotted their destruction. His plot being discovered, a massacre of the Cholulans followed; and Cortes, in Nov., entered the capital without resistance. He next seized Montezuma, and kept him as a hostage. He was at first treated with respect, which was soon changed to insult; carried so far, that fetters were put on his legs. When Cortes, with a great part of his forces, marched out to oppose Narvaez, the Mexicans rose, and furiously attacked the Spaniards who remained. The return of Cortes alone saved them from destruction; and hostilities were still going on, when Montezuma was induced to advance to the battlements of the Spanish fortress in his royal robes, and attempt to pacify his subjects: this excited their indignation against him, and, being struck on the temple with a stone, he fell to the ground. From motives of policy, every attention was paid him by Cortes; but, rejecting all nourishment, he tore off his bandages, and soon after expired, spurning every attempt at conversion. His 2 sons and 3 daus. were converted; and Charles V. gave a grant of lands, and the title of Count of Montezuma, to one of his sons, who was the founder of a noble family in Spain. One of the counts of Montezuma was viceroy of Mexico from 1697 to 1701.

Haviland; capt. in May, 1762. He served in the campaign against the Spanish W. Indies; resided for a time in this country, but revisited Eng., where, in 1772, he sold out his commission, and came to America. In 1773 he purchased an estate at Rhinebeck on the Hudson, and m. the dau. of R. R. Livingston. He represented Dutchess Co. in the first Prov. convention in 1775; received in June the app. of brig.-gen. from Congress; and was second in com. under Schuyler in the exped. against Canada. The illness of Schuyler threw the chief com. upon him in Oct.; and notwithstanding the scanty supplies of munitions of war, and the mutinous spirit of his troops, he captured St. Johns, Chambly, and Montreal, and finally effected a junction with Arnold before the walls of Quebec, Dec. 4. He was (Dec. 9, 1775) made a maj.-gen. Quebec was immediately invested; though the army was inadequate, and on the point of mutiny, their guns few in number, and insufficient in size, and they disheartened by severe cold and protracted marches. At a council of officers, it was determined to attempt to capture the place by a coup de main. The assault took place early in the morning of the last day of the year, in the midst of a snow-storm, and would probably have been successful but for the fall of the gallant leader, who, with two of his aides, was killed by the first and only discharge from a battery upon which they were advancing. His troops, disheartened by his fall, retreated. His death was regarded as a great public calamity; and public honors were paid him throughout the land. He was eulogized in the British parliament by Chatham, Burke, and Barre, and even by Lord North. Congress voted to erect a monument to his memory, which was placed in front of St. Paul's Church, N. Y. City. Montgomery's widow survived him more than half a century. His brother Alexander, commonly called "Black Montgomery," was in parliament for Donegal Co. many years.

Monts, Pierre du Guast, Sieur de, a French colonizer of Acadia. He was gentleman-in-ordinary of the king's chamber, and gov. of Pons, and had been to the St. Lawrence with Chauvin, when in 1604 he received a grant of Acadie, a region defined as extending from the 40th to the 46th deg. N. lat.; and was made lieut.-gen. in Acadie, with vice-regal powers. Accomp. by Poutrincourt and Champlain, he set sail 7 Apr. 1604, discovered Annapolis Harbor, explored the Bay of Fundy, visited and named the River St. John, and, planting his colony on an islet at the mouth of the River St. Croix, wintered there, but in the following Aug. removed to Port Royal, where he began a settlement. He soon afterward returned to France, leaving the com. to Pontgrave, and despatched another ship with supplies for the Colony in May, 1806; but, his monopoly having been rescinded in 1607, he abandoned an enterprise from which he had reaped no benefit.

Morgan, CHARLES W., commo. U.S.N., b. Va. 1790; d. Washington, D.C., 5 Jan. 1853. Nephew of Gen. Dan. Morgan. Midsh. 1 Jan. 1808; lieut. 3 Mar. 1813; com. 15 Apr. 1820; capt. 21 Feb. 1831; lieut. of "The Constitution" in her action with "The Guerrière," 19 Aug. 1812, and with "The Java," 29 Dec. 1812, for which services he received a sword from the Va. legisl. He com. the Mediterranean squadron in 1841–3.

Morgan, GEN. DANIEL, b. Hunterdon Co., N. J., 1736; d. Winchester, Va., July 6, 1802. He had little education; at the age of 17 left his father's farm, and was a wagoner in Braddock's army in 1755. In the spring of 1756 he knocked down a British lieut. who had insulted him, for which he received 500 lashes. The officer afterward made him a public apology. In 1757 he served in the militia, and disting. himself in the defence of Edwards Fort. In 1758 he was made an ensign, and, while carrying despatches, was waylaid and severely wounded by Indians, escaping by presence of mind and the fleetness of his horse, from whose back he was taken insensible. After the peace he was much addicted to gambling and dissipation, and noted as a pugilist; but before 1771 had reformed; became a man of substance; and in 1774 com. a company in Lord Dunmore's exped. against the Indians. Immediately after the battle of Lexington, he, in less than a week, enrolled 96 men, the nucleus of his celebrated rifle corps, and marched them to Boston. He com. 3 companies in the exped. of Arnold against Quebec, and behaved with gallantry, but was made prisoner. On his exchange he was app., Nov. 12, 1776, col. of a rifle corps (11th Va.). Sent to the assistance of Gates in Sept. 1777, he took a most important part in the victory at Saratoga. The Va. legisl. voted him a horse, pistols, and sword, for this service. Rejoining the main army near Phila., he had a severe skirmish near Chestnut Hill with a part of Cornwallis's division. During a part of 1778 he was in com. of Woodford's brigade; March 20, 1779, he was made col. 7th Va. Regt., but resigned in June. After the defeat at Camden he joined the remnant of Gates's army at Hillsborough, and, Oct. 1, was placed in com. of a legionary corps; Oct. 13, 1780, he was made a brig.-gen. Shortly after Greene assumed the com. in Dec., Morgan was detached to the country watered by the Broad and Pacolet Rivers. Pursued by Col. Tarleton, he withdrew to the Cowpens, where, Jan. 17, 1781, he gained a brillant victory over that renowned officer, capturing or destroying nearly the whole of his force. A gold medal testified the appreciation of Congress of the skill and bravery of Morgan on this occasion. By a rapid retreat he evaded the pursuit of Cornwallis, and joined Greene; but illness, occasioned by exposure and hardship, compelled him to retire from active service. In 1794 he com. the army sent against the insurgents in Western Pa., and was M.C. in 1795–9. In 1800 he removed to Winchester. His oldest dau. m. Gen. Presley Neville of Pittsburg. In 1799 he pub. an address to his constituents, vindicating the administration of Mr. Adams. Morgan was six feet in height, and possessed great strength and endurance. — Life of Morgan, by James Graham, 12mo, 1856.

Morgan, GEN. DAVID BANISTER, b. West Springfield, Ms., 1773; d. Covington, La., July 15, 1848. He removed to La. in 1803; was in the Terr. legisl.; member of the Const. Conv.; representative and senator; and surveyor-gen. of the States of La. and Mpi.; brig.-gen. at the battle of New Orleans.

Morgan, EDWIN DENNISON (LL.D. of Wms. Coll. 1867), statesman, b. Washington, Ms., Feb. 8, 1811. Entering a grocery-store in Hartford, Ct., in 1828, he became a partner in 1831; removed to New York in 1836, and became a highly-successful merchant. A State senator in 1849–53; he was made chairman of the Repub. Committee; and was gov. of N.Y. in 1859–63. His administration was marked by a decrease of the State debt, an increase in the revenue from the canals, and a frequent use of the veto-power. Such was his zeal and efficiency in raising and equipping troops for the war, that the State sent about 220,000 men to the field. Maj.-gen. of vols. 20 Sept. 1861; resigned Jan. 1, 1863. U.S. senator in 1863–9. Offered the secretaryship of the treasury by Mr. Lincoln, but declined.

Morgan, GEN. GEORGE W., b. Washington Co., Pa., 20 Sept. 1820. He was a capt. in the Texan struggle for independence. Studied at West Point in 1841–3, but removed to Mount Vernon, O., where in 1845 he began to practise law. When the Mexican war broke out, he became col. 2d Ohio Vols. (Jan. 1846), with which he repulsed the Mexican cavalry near Marin (Feb. 1847); was app. col. 15th U.S. Inf. Mar. 1847; and won the brev. of brig.-gen. for gallantry at Contreras and Churubusco, where he was severely wounded. Consul at Marseilles 1856–8; res. minister at Lisbon in 1858–61; brig.-gen. vols. Nov. 21, 1861. Assigned to duty under Gen. Buell in Mar. 1862, he took com. of the 7th division of the Army of the Ohio, with which he occupied Cumberland Gap in S.E. Ky., driving out the Confederates, June 18, but was compelled to retreat Sept. 17. In Nov. he was assigned to a com. under Gen. Rosecrans in Tenn. He com. a division under Sherman against Vicksburg in 1863, in which year he resigned. Democ. M.C. 1868–72.

Morgan, Sir Henry, buccaneer, b. ab. 1637; d. 1690. Son of a Welsh farmer. For many years he maintained his position among the W. India islands as chief of a host of pirates composed of adventurers from all the nations of Europe. From his strongholds, one of which was the Island of St. Catharine's, he made many successful descents upon the Spanish settlements in his vicinity; and at sea captured many rich prizes. In 1666 he took Porto Bello and Panama from the Spaniards. Having amassed a large fortune, he settled at Jamaica, of which island he was app. gov. by Charles II., and knighted. Author of "Voyage to Panama, 1670," Lond. 8vo, 1683. An account of him is in Esquemeling's "Buccaneers of America," Lond. 4to, 1684.

Morgan, Gen. James D., b. Boston, Ms., Nov. 19, 1810. At the age of 16 he went to sea in the ship "Beverley." The crew mutinied; and the ship was soon after burned. Morgan, with others of the crew, escaped in boats; finally landed in S. America; and, after the greatest hardships, made his way back to Boston, after 6 months' absence. Removing to Quincy, Ill., in 1834, he engaged in mercantile pursuits. During the Mexican war he was capt. in the 1st Ill. Vols.; in 1861 he became lieut.-col. 7th Ill. Vols.; and, for merit. services at New Madrid and Corinth, was made brig.-gen. 17 July, 1862; in Nov. 1862 he com. a brigade at Nashville, Tenn.; and in Sherman's Atlanta and Georgia campaigns com. a division of the 14th corps.

Morgan, John, M.D. (Edinb. U. 1764), F.R.S., an eminent physician, b. Phila. 1735; d. there Oct. 15, 1789. Phila. Coll. 1757. He studied medicine under Dr. Redman; and, as a surgeon and lieut. of Pa. troops, served in the war with France until 1760, when he went to Europe; attended the lectures and dissections of the celebrated Wm. Hunter; and, after spending two years in Edinburgh, visited Paris, Holland, and Italy; and, on his return to London, was elected a fellow of the Roy. Soc.; a member of the Coll. of Physicians in Edinburgh; and a licentiate of the Coll. of Phys. in London; returning to Phila. in 1765, he was elected prof. of the theory and practice of med.; and at once founded a med. school in connection with the college. In Oct. 1775 he was app. by Congress director-gen. and physician in chief to the gen. hospital of the army; removed in 1777 in consequence of unjust clamors. A committee of Congress afterward investigated his conduct, and honorably acquitted him of all the charges against him. He pub. a "Discourse upon the Institution of Medical Schools in America," 1765; "A Recommendation of Inoculation according to Baron Dinesdale's Method," &c., 1776. He received in 1766, from John Sargeant of London, a gold medal for the best essay on the reciprocal advantages of a perpetual union between Great Britain and her American Colonies. In 1777 he pub. a vindication of his public character of director-gen. One of the founders of the Amer. Philos. Soc. in 1769, and pub. some papers in its Transactions. In 1773 he visited Jamaica to procure donations for Philadelphia College.

Morgan, John H., gen. C.S.A., b. Huntsville, Ala., June 1, 1826; killed at Greenville, Tenn., Sept. 4, 1864. In 1830 he settled near Lexington, Ky. He was 1st lieut. in Marshall's cav. at the battle of Buena Vista; was extensively engaged in the manuf. of bagging at Lexington; when, in Sept. 1861, he joined Buckner at the head of the Lexington Rifles, and at Shiloh com. a squadron of cavalry. He soon after commenced his series of raids into Ky., in which he destroyed many millions of dollars' worth of military stores; captured and burned railroad-trains filled with supplies, tore up railroad-tracks, burned bridges, and destroyed culverts, in the rear of the Union armies; and made it necessary to garrison every important town in the State. He moved with the utmost celerity, and, by taking a telegraph-operator with him, misled his foes, and acquainted himself with their movements to intercept him. In 1863 he undertook a bold and extensive raid through Ky., Ind., and Ohio; but he with nearly his whole com. were captured, and Morgan and his officers were confined in the Ohio Penitentiary. He afterward escaped: subsequently undertook a raid into Tenn.; but, being betrayed while stopping at a farm-house, was surrounded in the night by fed. cavalry, and killed in an attempt to escape.

Morgan, William, whose singular fate has given his name a great notoriety, b. Culpeper Co., Va., ab. 1775; d. Sept. 19, 1826. He served under Jackson at the battle of New Orleans; moved to York, U.C., in 1821, where he commenced business as a brewer, but subsequently removed to Batavia, N.Y. In Aug. 1826 it became known that he was preparing for the press a work divulging the secrets of Freemasonry. Some infatuated members of the fraternity in his neighborhood, having failed in the attempt to dissuade him from his project, took him, on the 10th of Sept., under the pretence of a charge for larceny, to Canandaigua. This charge having been abandoned, and a civil suit instituted, judgment was obtained for a small amount; and he was committed to the jail of Ontario Co. Discharged on the evening of the 12th, he was seized as he passed out of the jail, put into a carriage, and taken to Fort Niagara, where he was murdered. This outrage excited the most intense indignation against the order, which was soon turned to political purposes. An Anti-Masonic party was formed, which predominated in Western N.Y., and had many converts elsewhere. Author of "Illustrations of Masonry," the 2d ed. of which (1826) contains an acc. of his kidnapping.

Morillo, Pablo, Count of Carthagena, and Marquis de la Fuente, a Spanish gen., b. Fuente, 1777; d. Madrid, July 27, 1838. He first served against Napoleon, rising to the rank of general; placed in 1814 at the head of the Spanish forces in S. America, he became noted for his cruelty to the revolutionists, but was finally defeated by Bolivar, and compelled to sign the truce of Truxillo, Nov. 25, 1820; after which he returned to Spain. He there sided alternately with both parties, and, on the resto-

Morphy, Paul Charles, the greatest of modern chess-players, b. N. Orleans, June 22, 1837; son of Judge M. of the Supreme Court of La., and learned the moves from seeing his father play. In the autumn of 1849 Herr Loewenthal, the celebrated Hungarian player, visited the Crescent City; and out of 3 games against the young Paul, then but 12 years old, he lost 2, and drew 1. He was educated at the S. C. College, and studied law. At the Chess Congress in New York in 1857, Morphy defeated in a majority of games — many being at considerable odds — the first players of the U.S.; visiting Europe in 1858, he contended with all the great players of Europe — Loewenthal, Harrwitz, Rivière, Laroche, Journoud Devinck, and the celebrated Adolph Anderssen, whom he vanquished — with the exception of Mr. Stanton, who prudently declined the contest. At the annual meeting of the British Chess Association at Birmingham, he played 8 games simultaneously, without seeing the boards, winning 6, losing 1, and 1 being drawn. He has latterly devoted himself almost exclusively to the practice of law in New Orleans and Richmond.

Morris, Lewis, statesman, b. Morrisania, N.Y., 1671; d. Kingsbury, N. J., May 21, 1746. Son of Richard, an officer of Cromwell's army, who settled, ab. 1672, on a farm of 3,000 acres, near Harlem, N.Y., called Morrisania. Adopted by his uncle Lewis, he once, through fear of his resentment, fled to Va., and thence to the West Indies. Embracing the law, he became a judge of the N. J. Superior Court in 1692, and a member of the council; was afterward an active member of the Assembly, and an opponent of Gov. Cornbury, against whom he drew up the complaint of the Assembly, and presented it in person to the queen. He was for several years chief justice of N.Y. and N.J.; was state councillor in 1710–38; acting gov. 1731; and gov. of N. J. 1738–46. Active in bringing about the separation of the govts. of N.Y. and N. J. in 1738. Of his sons, Lewis was a judge of vice-admiralty; and Robert Hunter was 20 years chief justice of N. J. — Mem. by Rev. R. Davidson, N. J. Hist. Proc. vol. iv.

Morris, Lewis, signer of the Decl. of Indep., b. Morrisania, N.Y., 1726; d. there Jan. 22, 1798. Y.C. 1746. He was the eldest of four bros., — Staats, a gen. in the British army and an M.P.; Richard, judge in the N.Y. Vice-Adm. Court, afterward chief justice, who d. Apr. 1810; and Gouverneur. Devoting himself to agriculture, he possessed at the period of the Revol. an ample estate. In the Congress of 1775 he served on the most important committees, and had assigned to him the arduous task of detaching the Western Indians from the coalition with Great Britain, which he executed with zeal and address. In the beginning of 1776 he resumed his seat in Congress, where he was a laborious and serviceable member; and his beautiful and extensive manor near New York was soon after laid waste by the British. He left Congress in 1777, and was afterwards in the State legisl., and a maj.-gen. of militia. Three of his sons served with distinction in the army, and received the thanks of Congress, — LEWIS (N J. Coll. 1774) was aide to Gen. Sullivan, and afterward to Gen. Greene; STAATS was aide to Gen. Wayne (his son LEWIS N., capt. U.S.A., was killed at Monterey. LEWIS O., son of the latter, col. 113th N.Y. Vols., fell at Cold Harbor, 3 June, 1864); JACOB, aide to Gen. Charles Lee, afterward member of the N.Y. Assembly and senate, b. 28 Dec. 1755, d. 10 June, 1844. His youngest son RICHARD VALENTINE, capt. U.S.N. (app. June, 1798), d. Morris, ROBERT, financier and statesman, b. Liverpool, Eng., 20 Jan. 1733; d. Phila. 7 May, 1806. At 13 he came with his father to Phila.; entered the counting-house of Charles Willing, and was a partner in the business in 1754–93. He was supercargo in several voyages, and on one occasion was made prisoner by the French. Prominent in opposition to the Stamp Act: in signing the Non-Importation Act of 1765, the house of Willing and Morris made a great sacrifice. Delegate to the Cont. Cong. in 1776–8, and signer of the Decl. of Indep. Member of the committee of ways and means, his personal credit was exerted to the utmost, especially at the close of 1776, when the term of service of the troops had expired; performing a similar service in aid of Gen. Greene's prosecution of the Southern campaign in 1780, and raising $1,400,000 to enable Washington to proceed in the exped. which resulted in the capture of Cornwallis at Yorktown. In 1780 he established a bank, to which he subscribed £10,000, mainly to supply the army with provisions; founded the Bank of N. America; and from Feb. 1781 to Nov. 1784 was supt. of finance, pledging his personal credit whenever his official resources were inadequate. Member of the Pa. legisl. in 1786, and of the conv. which framed the Federal Const. in 1787; U.S. senator 1789–95; offered the post of sec. of the treas., he declined, and named Alex. Hamilton for that office. He engaged with Gouv. Morris in the E. I. and China trade; but in his old age embarked in vast land-speculations, which proved ruinous to his fortunes; and he passed the latter years of his life in prison for debt. Morris was a fluent and impressive orator, and possessed much political knowledge, and great acquaintance with general affairs.

He was in 1819–22 Cong. pastor in Nantucket, Ms.; subsequently at Boundbrook, N.J., and in Indiana, where he procured a charter for a college, and was some time a professor. He delivered courses of lectures on geology, also devoting himself to genealogical pursuits. He pub. "Memorial of the Morses," 1850; "Descendants of Lawrence Litchfield," 1855; "Capt. John Grout," 1857; of "Several Ancient Puritans," 3 vols. 1857–60; and "Gen. Register of Sherborn and Holliston." — N. E. H. and Gen. Reg. xix. 371.

Morse, Jedidiah, D.D. (U. of Edinb. 1794), clergyman and geographer, b. Woodstock, Ct., Aug. 23, 1761; d. N. Haven, June 9, 1826. Y.C. 1783. Licensed to preach in 1785; tutor in Y.C. in 1786; Apr. 30, 1789, installed minister of the First Cong. Church, Charlestown, Ms., which he resigned in 1820. Dr. Morse is the father of American geography. He prepared in 1784 at New Haven, for the use of schools, the first work of the kind in Amer. This was followed by larger works of geography, and gazetteers, from materials obtained by travelling and correspondence, — especially that of Jeremy Belknap the historian, Thomas Hutchins, geog.-gen., and Ebenezer Hazard. His larger geographical works were reprinted in Europe. Dr. Morse was also much occupied in religious controversy; in upholding the orthodox faith in the N.E. churches against the assaults of Unitarianism, — an undertaking which seriously affected his health. In 1804 he was active in enlarging the Ms. Gen. Assoc. of Cong. Ministers; was sole editor of the Panoplist from 1806 to 1811; and was prominent in establishing the Theol. Sem. at Andover. Commissioned by the U. S. Govt. to visit the Indian tribes of the N.W., the result of his labors was a vol. pub. in 1822, entitled "Indian Report," &c. Dr. Morse also pub. "A Compendious History of New England," Camb. 1804; "Annals of the Amer. Revol.," Hartf. 1824; and 25 sermons and addresses on special occasions. He was an active member of the Ms. Hist. Soc., and many other literary and scientific bodies.

Morse, Samuel Finley Breese, LL.D. (Y.C. 1846), one of the inventors of the electric-telegraph, b. Charlestown, Ms., 27 Apr. 1791. Y.C. 1810; d. N.Y. City, April 2, 1872. He went to Eng. with Washington Allston, arriving in Aug. 1811; studied painting under Benjamin West; exhibited his "Dying Hercules" at the Roy. Acad. in 1813; and in May of that year received a prize of a gold medal from the London Adelphi for a plaster model of the same. He returned home in 1815; painted portraits in N. Hampshire at $15 per head; took up his residence in N.Y. City ab. 1822, and painted a full length of Lafayette. In 1829 he ed. the poems of L. M. Davidson, with a biog. sketch. He was again in Eng. in 1829–32; and, on his return home, the first idea of a permanent recording telegraph was suggested to him by Dr. Jackson, his fellow-passenger. In 1835 he demonstrated the practicability of his invention by a model; filed his caveat at the patent-office in 1837; perfected his invention in 1840; and in 1844 completed the first electric-telegraph in the U.S., — between Baltimore and Washington. At a convention held in 1851 for the purpose of adopting a uniform system of telegraphing for all Germany, that of Morse was selected. Prof. Wheatstone, the English inventor, took out, with W. F. Cooke, a joint patent for a magnetic teleg. in 1837. The representatives of the principal European powers, assembled at Paris ab. 1857, presented Mr. Morse with the sum of 400,000 francs as a recompense for his invention. In a letter of Mr. Morse to the sec. U.S. treasury, dated 10 Aug. 1843, occurs the first suggestion of the project of the Atlantic telegraph. Honors have been showered upon him by European sovereigns, and by scientific and literary societies. He resides on the banks of the Hudson, near Poughkeepsie. Author of "Foreign Conspiracy against the U.S.," 1835; and a biog. sketch of Lewis Clauszing, N.Y., 1836. As to the real inventor of the electric teleg., see Dr. Wynter's "Curiosities of Civilization."

Morse, SIDNEY EDWARDS, journalist, bro. of S. F. B. Morse, b. Charlestown, Ms., Feb. 7, 1794. Y.C. 1811. In 1815 he established the Boston Recorder, a weekly religious newspaper, of which for about one year he was a proprietor and editor. In 1817 he invented, in connection with his brother, and patented, the flexible piston-pump. He afterwards pub. geographical text-books. In May, 1823, with his younger bro., R. C. Morse, he established the N. Y. Observer, the oldest religious newspaper in N. Y. State. In June, 1839, in connection with Henry A. Munson, he produced by a new art, termed cerography, map-prints superior to those hitherto known. Died N.Y. 23 Dec. '71.

Morton, CHARLES, minister of Charlestown from Nov. 5, 1686, to his d. Apr. 11, 1698; b. Cornwall, Eng., 1626. Son of Rev. Nicholas. Educated at Oxford U., of which he was a fellow. At first a royalist, he at length became a Puritan; was minister at Blisland until ejected in 1662; and, after the great fire in Lond., established an acad. at Newington Green. De Foe, author of "Robinson Crusoe," was one of his pupils. After 20 years' service there, he was so pestered by processes from the bishops' court, that he was obliged to leave; and came to N.E. in July, 1686. He was a man of eminent learning. Author of a number of treatises, among them a "Discourse on improving the Country of Cornwall," a part of which is in the "Philos. Trans.," Apr. 1675; "Considerations on the New River;" "The Ark, its Loss and Recovery." Vice-pres. of H.U., and drew up a system of logic long in use there.

Morton, Samuel George, M.D. (U. of Pa. 1820; Edinb. 1823), a disting. naturalist, b. Phila. Jan. 26, 1799; d. there May 15, 1851. In 1826 he established himself as a physician in Phila. He was rec. sec. of the Acad. of Nat. Sciences in 1825, and its pres. in 1840; was prof. of anatomy in the Pa. Med. Coll. from Sept. 18, 1839, to Nov. 6, 1843; and was a member of many learned societies in various parts of the U.S., in Europe, and in the East. In 1834 he made a voyage to the W. Indies, where he studied the diversity of races, and the relations resulting from their contact. He contrib. many papers, on a wide range of subjects, to the "Transactions" of the Acad., the Med. and Physiol. Journal, Silliman's Journal, and the "Transactions of the Philos. Society." Dr. Morton pub. "Illustrations of Pulmonary Consumption," Phila. 1834; "An Illustrated System of Human Anatomy," Phila. 1839; "Crania Americana," Phila. and Lond. 1839; and "Crania Egyptiaca," Phila. 1844. The former was pronounced by Prof. Silliman "the most important, extensive, and valuable contribution to the natural history of man which has yet appeared on the American continent." His collection of skulls, which embraced, according to the catalogue of 1849, no less than 1,512 specimens, of which about 900 were human, is said to be the most extensive and valuable in the world. A selection of his inedited papers was pub., with additional contributions from Dr. J. C. Nott and George R. Gliddon, under the title of "Types of Mankind, or Ethnological Researches, based upon the Ancient Monuments, Paintings, Sculptures, and Crania of Races," &c. A Memoir has been pub. by Charles D. Meigs, M.D., and another by Geo. B. Wood, M.D. An appendix to the former contains a full list of Dr. Morton's writings.

Author of "The New English Canaan," containing an account of the natives, a description of the country, and the tenets and practice of the Church, 4to, 1632; repr. in Force's Tracts, iii. He was a lawyer who came over with Weston's Company in June, 1622; and, returning, came again with Capt. Wollaston in 1625, and settled at Mount Wollaston, now Braintree. On May Day, 1626, this place was renamed Ma-re Mount, and became so obnoxious by the free and licentious manners and lives of Morton and his associates, that he was taken and sent to Eng. in June, 1628. In 1629 he returned, but was again seized and transported in 1630, and his house demolished, "that it might no longer be a roost for such unclean birds." Returning again in 1643, after being arrested and imprisoned a year for his "scandalous book," he was dismissed with a fine in 1644.

Morton, William Thomas Green, M.D., discoverer of the use of ether as an anæsthetic in surgery, b. Charlton, Ms., Aug. 9, 1819; d. N.Y. City, July 15, 1868. Quitting his father's farm at the age of 17, he came to Boston, but, not succeeding in business, studied dentistry in Baltimore in 1840, and in 1842 settled in Boston, where he established a successful manuf. of artificial teeth on a large scale. While attending lectures at the med. coll. there, the idea was suggested to him that sulphuric ether might be used to alleviate pain in his operations. Satisfied of its safety by experiment on himself, he administered it successfully Sept. 30, 1846, extracting without pain a firmly-rooted bicuspid tooth. The general introduction into surgery of ethereal anæsthesia dates from Oct. 16, 1846, when, at the request of Dr. J. C. Warren, ether was administered at the Ms. Gen. Hospital to a man from whose jaw a vascular tumor was removed, the patient remaining unconscious during the operation. This discovery is, without doubt, the most important benefaction ever made by man to the human race. Various claimants at once appeared for the honor of originating it, among them Dr. C. T. Jackson. Dr. Morton, in Nov. 1846, obtained a patent for his discovery, under the name of "Letheon," offering, however, free rights to all charitable institutions. Govt. appropriated his discovery to its use without compensation. In 1852 he received the large gold medal, the Monthyon Prize in medicine and surgery. He suffered persecution almost unparalleled in private, and before Congress; his business was broken up; and even his house was attached by the sheriff for debt. From 1846 to 1854 he struggled incessantly to procure from Congress remuneration for his discovery, but, notwithstanding the favorable reports of the committees to whom the subject was referred, failed to receive it. The close of this struggle left him and his family in poverty. The principal medical men of Boston, New York, and Phila., signed an appeal for a national testimonial to Dr. Morton, concurring in assigning to him the merit of the discovery. In 1858, to save his house from a sheriff's sale for debt, he instituted a suit against a marine-hospital surgeon for infringing his patent, which was decided in his favor in the U. S. Circuit Court. ("Trials of a Public Benefactor," by Dr. Nathan P. Rice, N.Y. 1860.) A pamphlet resp. his claims was pub. by R. H. Dana, 1848. Dr. M. pub. a work on "The Inhalation of Sulphuric Ether." — See "Hist. Memoranda," &c., by J. I. Bowditch and others, 1871; and see also art. 'Horace Wells."

Moseby, MARY WEBSTER; d. 1844, a. 52. Dau. of Robert Pleasants; wife of John. G. Moseby of Richmond, Va. Contrib. to periodicals, and pub. in 1840 "Pocahontas," a legend, with hist. notes. — Allibone.

Mosquera (mos-kā'-rā), DON RUY GARCIA, a Spanish navigator, b. 1501, sailed with Seb. Cabot to S. America in 1526, and was subsequently one of the founders of Buenos Ayres.

Mothe Cadillac, ANTOINE DE LA, founder of Detroit, b. Gascony, ab. 1660; d. after 1717. Of noble birth. He served in Acadia as a capt. in the French army; and in 1680 was ordered to France by Louis XIV. to furnish information relative to New France and the English Colonies, and especially to the condition of the harbors and defences on the coast. In 1691 he was made lord of Bouagnat and Mount Desert, Me. In 1694 Frontenac app. him com. of Michilimacinac. Landing at Detroit, July 24, 1701, he laid the foundations of the present city, which he named Fort Pontchartrain. The little settlement had among its enemies the Iroquois, the Jesuits, the gov.-gen. and all the Canadian officials, as De La Mothe, unlike them, received his commission directly from the king; and, moreover, this post threatened to divert profitable trade from Montreal and Quebec. Arrested at Quebec in 1704 upon charges of official misconduct, he was, after vexatious delays, triumphantly acquitted. He returned to Detroit in the fall of 1706, and in 1707 marched against the Miamis, and reduced them to terms. Visiting the Illinois country, he reported the discovery of a silver mine, afterward called the La Mothe Mine. He next established a post among the Indians of Ala. He punished the hostile Natchez tribe, who made peace; and a fort was erected in their country in 1714, named Fort Rosalie, in honor of Mme. de Pontchartrain; another was built at Natchitoches to prevent the Spaniards approaching the French colony. App. in 1711 gov. of La.; in 1717 the John Law Scheme was perfected, and the govt. and trade of La. passed into the hands of the new "Western Co.," and De La Mothe returned to France. In 1787 the Commonwealth of Ms. confirmed to his grand-daughter Mme. Gregoire so much of Mt. Desert Island as was not already granted to others.

Motley, JOHN LOTHROP, LL.D. (H. U. 1860), D.C.L. (Oxf. 1860), historian, b. Dorchester, Ms., Apr. 15, 1814. H.U. 1831. He spent a year at each of the Universities of Göttingen and Berlin; afterwards travelled in Italy; returned to America; studied law, and was adm. to the bar in 1836, but did little in the profession. In 1839 he pub. a novel, "Morton's Hope;" in 1840 was sec. of legation to the court of Russia, but soon returned; and in 1849 produced another historical novel, "Merry Mount." Meanwhile contrib. articles on De Tocqueville's "Democracy in America," and on Goethe and his writings, to the N. Y. Review, and on Peter the Great to the N.A. Review. Becoming interested in the history of Holland, he embarked for Europe, to gather material, in 1851, and in 1856 pub. in Lond. 3 vols. 8vo, entitled "The Rise of the Dutch Republic." This work was translated into the Dutch, German, and French languages, the latter with an introduction by Guizot. Mr. Motley made a short visit to the U.S. in 1858, and in 1861 pub. "The United Netherlands," 2 vols. 8vo, completed in 1868 by two additional vols. He has been elected a member of various learned societies in Europe and America, among them the Institute of France. He m. a sister of Park Benjamin. In 1861 he pub. in the London Times an elaborate essay entitled "Causes of the American Civil War;" and, 16 Dec. 1868, del. before the N.Y. Hist. Soc. an address entitled "Historic Progress and Amer. Democracy." Nov. 14, 1861, he was app. minister-plenipo. to Austria; recalled in 1867. From April, 1869, to Nov. 1870, he was minister to England.

Mott, GEN. GERSHOM, b. Mercer Co., N. J., 1822. Was an officer in the Mex. war; lieut.-col. 5th N. J. Regt. in 1861; col. 6th N. J. Regt. 7 May, 1862; brig.-gen. 7 Sept. 1862; brev. maj.-gen. 10 Sept. 1864; maj.-gen. 1 Dec. 1865; served in the Peninsular campaign; was wounded at the second battle of Bull Run; com. 2d N. J. Mott, LUCRETIA (COFFIN), preacher of the Society of Friends, b. Nantucket, Jan. 3, 1793. Her parents removed to Boston in 1804, and to Phila. in 1809, where, in 1811, she m. James Mott, who became a partner with her father; in 1817 she took charge of a large day-school in Phila., but began preaching in her 26th year; she travelled through N.E., Pa., Md., and a part of Va., preaching against slavery, and advocating the peculiar tenets of the Society of Friends,—obedience to the inward light, and a firm adherence to peace principles. In the division of the Society in 1827, Mrs. Mott adhered to the Hicksite party. She took an active part in organizing the American Anti-slavery Society in Phila. in 1833. She was a delegate to the World's Antislavery Convention in Lond. in 1840; but was excluded from a seat, a majority denying the right of women to take part in public assemblies. She has taken an active part in woman's-rights conventions held annually since 1848. — Eminent Women of the Age, 1868.

Mott, VALENTINE, M.D. (Col. Coll. 1806), LL.D., surgeon, b. Glen Cove, L. I., Aug. 20, 1785; d. N. York, Apr. 26, 1865. Henry his father, a disting. physician of N.Y., d. 1840, a. 83. After studying at Lond. and Edinburgh, he was app., on his return in 1809, to the chair of surgery in Col. and Surgeons, and in the N.Y. University Med. Coll. as prof. of surgery and relative anatomy, of which latter branch of science he is the founder. In 1818 Dr. Mott placed a ligature around the brachio-cephalic trunk, only two inches from the heart, for aneurism of the right subclavian artery; an operation which the patient survived 26 days. He exsected the entire right clavicle for malignant disease of that bone, applying 40 ligatures, — the most dangerous and difficult operation, as he himself asserted, that can be performed upon the human body. He was the first to tie the primitive iliac artery for aneurism, and was the first who removed the lower jaw for necrosis. Sir Astley Cooper says, "Dr. Mott has performed more of the great operations than any man living, or that ever did live." In 1835 he travelled extensively through England, the Continent, and the East. He pub. "Travels in Europe and the East," 8vo, N.Y. 1842; translation of Velpeau's "Operative Surgery," 4 vols. 8vo, N.Y.; "Anniversary Discourse" before the graduates of the N.Y.U. 1860; "Mott's Cliniques," and several papers in med. periodicals; and the "Transactions of the N.Y. Acad. of Medicine." He received many honors from American and European learned associations.

Motte, Rebecca, a heroine of the Revol.; d. in 1815 at her plantation on the Santee, S.C. Dau. of an English gentleman named Brewton; m. Jacob Motte, a planter, in 1758, and was the mother of six children. A widow of fortune at the period of the Brit. occupancy of S.C., her fine large mansion was occupied by a garrison of 150 men under Capt. McPherson; when it was attacked by Marion and Lee in May, 1781, and the expedient was adopted of setting fire to the house by fastening lighted combustibles upon the roof by means of arrows. Mrs. Motte herself supplied the means, presenting to Lee a fine bow and a bundle of arrows. This measure was successful: the garrison capitulated, and the flames were extinguished with little damage. Gen. Thomas Pinckney m. two of her daughters in succession: a third m. Col. Wm. Alston of S.C.

Moulton, Ellen Louise (Chandler), magazine-writer, b. Pomfret, Ct., 1835; m. in 1855 Mr. William U. Moulton, a Boston editor; contrib. to periodicals from the age of 15, under the signature of "Ellen Louise." She pub. In May, 1724, he com. the company which attacked Norridgewock, destroying the village, and killing Father Ralle, the French missionary; he com. a regt. at the capture of Louisburg in 1745; was afterward sheriff of the county, councillor, and judge of C. C. P. and of probate.

Moulton, Joseph White, historian, b. Stratford, Ct., June, 1789; resided in N.Y. City, where he practised law many years. He pub. a history of early New York, "New York 70 Years Ago," 1849; "View of the City of Orange (New York) as it was in 1673;" "History of the State of N.Y.," with J. V. N. Yates, 2 vols. 8vo, 1824–6; "Chancery Practice of N.Y.," 1829–32, 3 vols. 8vo; "Mitford's Pleadings." Died Roslyn, L.I., Apr. 20, 1875.

Moultrie, William, maj.-gen. Revol. army, b. S.C. 1731; d. Charleston, S.C., Sept. 27, 1805. Son of Dr. John Moultrie, an eminent physician of Charleston, b. Scotland, d ab. 1773. His education was respectable; and in 1761 he was a capt. of light inf. in the Cherokee exped.; member of the Prov. Congress in 1775 from St. Helena parish; elected col. 2d S.C. Regt. June 17; and Dec. 19, 1775, by planting a battery in the night at Haddrill's Point, compelled two British vessels blockading Charleston harbor to move farther off; member of the council of safety; and early in Mar. 1776 was ordered to Sullivan's Island, where a fort made of palmetto-logs was building for the protection of the harbor. Here, June 28, 1776, an attack was made by a British fleet under Sir Peter Parker, and a large land-force under Sir H. Clinton. The gallant and successful defence of Fort Moultrie earned for its commander imperishable renown, and saved the South from further attack for a long period. He was made a brig.-gen. Sept. 16, 1776, and transferred to the com. of a body of North-Carolinians at Haddrill's Point. In Feb. 1779 he defeated a superior British force, under Col. Gardner, near Beaufort. In May, with 1,000 militia, he opposed the advance of Gen. Prevost upon Charleston; retired before him, destroying bridges, and obstructing his march; threw himself into the city, and held it until the approach of Gen. Lincoln. In the spring of 1780 he again disting. himself at Charleston. On its capitulation he was taken, and remained a prisoner until exchanged, Feb. 1782, for Gen. Burgoyne; maj.-gen. Oct. 15, 1782; gov. of S.C. in 1785–6 and 1794–6. While a prisoner, he wrote his "Memoirs," 2 vols. 8vo, 1802. His bro. John, M.D. (U. of Edinb.), eminent in literature and medicine, was a loyalist, and was lieut.-gov. of E. Florida.

Mount, William Sidney, artist, b. Setauket, L.I., Nov. 26, 1807; d. there Nov. 19, 1868. Bred a farmer's boy, at 17 he was apprenticed to his bro., a sign-painter in N.Y. Placed in 1826 at the school of the Acad. of Design, of which he became a member in 1832; he produced in 1828 his first picture, — a port. of himself; in 1829 he established himself as a port.-painter in N.Y. A "Rustic Dance," in the Exhib. of 1830, attracted much attention. His pictures of humorous subjects, of negro life and physiognomy, have been highly appreciated. Among his best pieces are "Husking Corn," "Walking the Crack," "The Sportman's Last Visit," "The Raffle," "The Courtship," "Nooning," "Bargaining for a Horse," "The Power of Music," "Music is Contagious," "Just in Time," "California News," "Banjo-Player," &c. Among his best portraits are those of Bishop Onderdonk and Gen. Jeremiah Johnson.

This was abridged by Purchas, which abr. was repub. in Ms. Hist. Colls. viii. The parts of the original relation which are omitted in the abridgment are in Hist. Colls. ix. 26–74. An ed. with notes and an introd. by Rev. H. M. Dexter was pub. 1865, and another, by Rev. Geo. B. Cheever, in 1848, entitled "Journal of the Pilgrims."

Mouton, ALFRED, gen. C.S.A.; killed in the battle of Mansfield, Ark., April 9, 1864. Son of Alex., acting gov. of La. 1841-5, and U.S. senator 1837–42. He was wounded at Shiloh, and, at the time of his death, com. a division in Dick Taylor's army.

Mowatt (RITCHIE), ANNA CORA, actress and author, b. Bordeaux, France, 1819; d. Eng. July 28, 1870. Her father, S. G. Ogden, a merchant of N.Y., and a leading spirit in Miranda's exped., m. a grand-dau. of Francis Lewis, signer of the Decl. of Indep., and went to France to recuperate his fallen fortunes. Failing in this, the family returned to N.Y., and suffered shipwreck on the passage. While at school, she attracted the attention of James Mowatt, a lawyer of N.Y., with whom she made a runaway match before she was 17. She soon after pub. "Pelayo," an epic in 5 cantos; and "The Reviewers Reviewed," a satire against the critics of the former poem. Her health failing, she visited Europe, and wrote "Gulzara, or the Persian Slave." Financial reverses overtaking her husband, Mrs. Mowatt, who had appeared in private theatricals, resolved to give public readings. Her first was given at Boston, Oct. 28, 1841. An attractive person, a sweet voice, and ladylike manners, achieved for her a decided success; and she continued her readings throughout the country. This occasioned a serious illness of two years, during which time she pub., under the pseudonyme of "Helen Berkley," "Evelyn," a novel, and "Fashion," a 5-act comedy. Under the tuition of W. H. Crisp and Thos. Barry, she prepared herself for the stage, and June 13, 1845, made her début as Pauline, in the "Lady of Lyons," at the Park Theatre. She became a favorite with the public, and began an engagement at the Howard Athenæum, Boston, Nov. 30, 1845. In Nov. 1847, she went to Europe; played successful engagements at Manchester, London, and Dublin; and was at one time leading lady at the Marylebone Theatre. Her husband died abroad; and her success in Eng. was at the time largely due to Mr. E. L. Davenport, with whom she acted for many months. After her return to America in July, 1851, she appeared in all the leading cities, but took leave of the stage on being married, June 7, 1854, to W. F. Ritchie, editor of the Richmond Enquirer. She afterward lived in Eng., and corresp. with several American papers. Her other writings are "Armand," a drama, 1847; "The Fortune-Hunter," 1854; "Autobiography of an Actress," 1854; "Mimic Life," 1856; "Twin Roses," 1857; "Fairy Fingers," "The Clergyman's Wife and Other Sketches," 1867; and "The Muse Singer."

Muhlenberg, JOHN PETER GABRIEL, maj.-gen. Revol. army, b. at the Trappe, Pa., Oct. 1, 1746; d. near Schuylkill, Pa., Oct. 1, 1807. Son of the preceding, and, with his bros., was educated in Germany. While at Halle, he ran away from college, and was for a year, and until discovered by a friend of his family, a private in a regt. of dragoons. His father prepared him for the ministry of the Lutheran Church. Ord. in 1772, and officiated as a clergyman at Woodstock, Va., for a few years, but, after the commencement of the Revol., resolved to lay aside his clerical robes, and, entering the pulpit for the last time, in the course of his sermon told his hearers that there was a time for all things, — a time to preach, and a time to fight, — and now was the time to fight. After the services, he stripped off his gown in the pulpit, and, appearing in full uniform, read his commission as col., and ordered the drummers to beat up for recruits. Large numbers of his parishioners joined his standard; and the "German regt." (8th Va.) was distinq. for its discipline and bravery. He had been in 1774 chairman of the com. of safety in his county, and also a member of the house of burgesses, and in 1776 a member of the State convention. He was in the battle at Charleston in 1776; Feb. 21, 1777, was made brig.-gen., and ordered to take charge of the Va. line; joining the army at Middlebrook in May following, he was in the battles of Brandywine, Germantown, and Monmouth, and was at the capture of Stony Point; holding the chief com. in Va., in 1780, until the arrival of Steuben, he opposed the invasions of Leslie and Arnold, and, when Cornwallis entered Va., he was next in com. to Lafayette; he com. the first brigade of light inf. at Yorktown, and at the close of the war was made a maj.-gen. Removing to Pa., he was immediately elected a member of the council; in 1785 was chosen vice-pres. of Pa.; was M.C. 1789–91, '93–5, and 1799–1801; was U.S. senator in 1801–2; and was app. by Jefferson supervisor of the revenue for the Dist. of Pa.; in 1803 he was made collector of the port of Phila. — *See Life of Gen. served in Smallwood's Md. regt. at White Plains, Flatbush, and N.Y.; was made a capt., and served bravely to the close of the campaign of 1777. About the time of the evacuation of New York, he was severely injured by the bursting of a piece of ordnance in a battery at which he was stationed. He com. at different periods several letters-of-marque, and in a number of well-fought naval actions exhibited intrepidity and skill. Having been captured by an English fleet, and soon afterwards exchanged, he volunteered his services as a lieut. on board the frigate "Trumbull," which, after clearing the capes of Delaware, and during a terrible storm at night, was attacked and taken by two British vessels of war. In this sanguinary engagement Murray behaved with disting. gallantry, and was severely wounded. On his recovery and exchange, he was selected as first lieut. of "The Alliance" frigate, com. Barry. He was in 13 battles in the army and navy. When our govt. organized a navy, he was commissioned capt. (July 1, 1798); the com. of the corvette "Montezuma," 20 guns, was given him; and he subsequently com. the frigates "Insurgent" and "Constellation." Being despatched with a squadron to the Mediterranean in 1802, his ship, while alone, was attacked by a squadron of Tripoline gunboats, which he drove into their own harbor.

Royal American regt. Oct. 24; maj.-gen. July, 1762; gov. of Quebec, Nov. 21, 1763, to 1766; col. 13th Foot, Dec. 1767; lieut.-gen. May 25, 1772; lieut.-gov. of Minorca in 1774; gov. 1778; gen. 1783; gov. of Hull 1785; and col. 21st Fusileers, June 5, 1789. Though defeated by De Levis in the second battle of Quebec, yet by his courage and ability he held Quebec until aid arrived from Eng. Gen. Murray was subsequently disting. for his gallant though unsuccessful defence of Minorca, in 1781, against De Crillon.

Murray, JAMES, a partisan officer in the service of the E.I. Co., b. Exeter, R.I., ab. 1765; d. 1806. In consequence of a quarrel with his family, he went to sea in early life, changing his name (Lillibridge) to that of Murray. In 1790 he entered the service of Holkar, the famous Mahratta chief, and soon became noted for his bravery and military skill. Incurring the displeasure of Holkar by his humanity to some British officers, after 15 years' service he abandoned him, and, raising a large force, occupied as a sovereign a large dist. When the war broke out between the British govt. and Scindia, Murray joined Lord Lake with a body of 7,000 cavalry, and was employed by him in many dangerous and important services. At the siege of Bhurtpore he was in continual action, and attained the character of being the best partisan officer in the army. At the close of the war, having acquired a large fortune, he determined to return to America. At a splendid entertainment given by him a few days before his intended departure from Calcutta, he mounted a favorite Arabian horse to leap over the dining-table, — a feat which he had often performed for the entertainment of his guests; but the horse, having his feet entangled in the carpet, threw his rider, who died from his injuries soon after. He was the best horseman in India, and unrivalled in the use of the broadsword.

Murray, JAMES, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, a dissenting divine and author; d. Eng. 1782. Author of "History of the American War," 4 vols. 8vo, London, July 29, 1778; "Sermons to Asses," 12mo; and "A History of the Churches of England and Scotland," 3 vols. 8vo, 1771.

Murray, JOHN, the founder of Universalism in Amer., and an eloquent preacher, b. Alton, Hampshire, Eng., Dec. 10, 1741; d. Boston, Ms., Sept. 3, 1815. His pious parents, who brought him up strictly, removed with him to Cork, Ireland, in 1752. He early became a convert to Methodism, and an occasional preacher in Wesley's connection. Returning to Eng. ab. 1760, he adopted Universalism; emig. to the U. S. in 1770; and preached in N. Y., N. J., and subsequently in Newport, Boston, Portsmouth, N.H., and other places in New Eng., where his doctrines occasionally subjected him to violence. He resided in Gloucester, Ms., in 1774, and was ordered to depart on suspicion of being a British emissary; but, through the exertions of his friends, he was enabled to remain and preach. In the spring of 1775 he was chaplain of the R.I. brigade before Boston; but a severe illness terminated this connection, and he returned to Gloucester, where he was established over a society of Universalists. He took part in the first Universalist convention at Oxford, Ms., 1785, and for a number of years was a delegate to the gen. convention of that body. In 1788 he visited Eng.; and in 1793 was installed over a society in Boston, where he passed the rest of his life. He published 3 vols. of Letters, and Sketches of Sermons, 1812–13; and wrote an Autobiography, of which the 8th edition was pub. in 1860, 12mo, Boston. His widow, JUDITH SARGENT, sister of Winthrop Sargent, a native of Cape Ann, d. Natchez, Mpi., June 6, 1820, a. 69. She wrote "The Repository and Gleaner," 3 vols. 1798, over the nom de plume "Constantia;" also poetical essays, signed "Honoria Martesia," in the Boston Weekly Magazine.

Murray, JOHN, Presb. minister, b. Antrim, Ireland, 22 May, 1742; d. Newburyport, Ms., 13 Mar. 1793. Educated at Edinburgh. He came to Amer. in 1763; settled first as a pastor at Phila.; from 1767 to 1779 in Boothbay, Me.; and from 4 June, 1781, till his d., at Newburyport. Such was his eloquence, that a full company was raised for the Revol. army in two hours after his address for that purpose. He acquired great ascendency over the people of his district by his powers as a preacher and his patriotic activity. In Aug. 1777 he held a corresp. with Com. Collier about an exchange of prisoners. He pub. 3 sermons on Justification, 1780; 3 sermons on the Original Sin imputed, 1791.

Murray, LINDLEY, grammarian and author, b. Swetara, near Lancaster, Pa., 1745; d. near York, Eng., Feb. 16, 1826. His father, who removed to New York in 1753, was a member of the Society of Friends, and a merchant. The son, after receiving a good education, studied law; was adm. to the bar in 1766, and soon after married. His limited practice was temporarily interrupted by a visit to Eng.; but, on his return to New York in 1771, he renewed it with more success. Mr. Murray's religious principles preventing him from taking part in the Revol. struggle, he retired to Islip, L.I., and employed his leisure in an abortive attempt to make salt. The bar, at this period, holding out little prospect, he became, like his father, a general merchant in N.Y. City, and with such success, that he was enabled, near the close of the war, to retire from business with a handsome competency. In 1784 he made a second voyage to Eng. for his health, and purchased a small estate at Holdgate, about a mile from York, upon which he resided till his death. In 1787 he pub. a tract entitled "The Power of Religion on the Mind," which passed through 17 editions. His next work, and that by which he is principally known, was his "English Grammar," first pub. in 1795; succeeded by his "English Exercises" and "Key," an abridgment of which treatises was, in 1797, pub. in one volume. His other writings are "The English Reader," with an introduction and sequel; "The Eng. Spelling-Book;" a new edition of his Grammar, Exercises, and Key, in 2 8vo vols.; a selection from Horne's "Commentary on the Psalms;" and "The Duty and Benefit of Reading the Scriptures." He wrote a memoir of his own life, pub. after his decease, with a continuation by Elizabeth Frank, York, 1826. His bro. JOHN, Jun., philanthropist of N.Y., b. 3 Aug. 1758, d. 4 Aug. 1819.

Murray, NICHOLAS, D.D. (Wms. Coll. 1843), clergyman and author, b. Ballynaslow, Ireland, 25 Dec. 1802; d. Elizabethtown, N.J., 4 Feb. 1861. Wms. Coll. 1826. He came to the U.S. in 1818, and was apprenticed in the printing-house of Harper & Bros. He studied theology at Princeton, N.J.; was settled pastor of a Presb. church in Wilkesbarre, Pa., in 1829; and from June, 1833, to his death, was pastor of the First Church, Elizabethtown, N.J. Moderator of the Presb. Gen. Assembly (O.S.) in 1849. In 1853, and again in 1860, he visited Europe. His "Letters to Archbishop Hughes," under the signature of "Kirwan," pub. in 1847, controverting with shrewdness and ability some of the doctrines and practices of the R.C. Church, were extensively reprinted in other lands, and gave him considerable reputation. He also pub. "Notes, Historical and Biog., concerning Elizabethtown, N. J.," 1844; "Romanism at Home," 1852; "Men and Things as I saw them in Europe in 1853;" "Parish and other Pencillings," 1854; "Happy Home," 1859; "Preachers and Preaching," 1860; "American Principles, and National Prosperity;" and a series of Letters to the N. Y. Observer during his last visit to Europe. A posthumous vol. of his sermons, entitled "A Dying Legacy," was pub. 1861. An interesting memoir of Murray is in a vol. of Memoirs by S. I. Prime.

Murray, REV. WILLIAM HEN. HARRISON, Cong. clergyman, b. Guilford, Ct., 26 Apr. 1840. Y.C. 1862. Licensed to preach in 1863, he officiated several years in Greenwich and other places in Ct. Since Nov. 1868 he has been pastor of Park-st. Church, Boston. Author of "Camp-Life in the Adirondack Mountains," 1868; "Music-hall Sermons," 1870. Eminent as a pulpit-orator and a lyceum-lecturer.

Murray, WILLIAM VANS, diplomatist and orator, b. Md. 1762; d. Dec. 11, 1803, at his seat in Cambridge, Md. Receiving a classical education, he went to Lond. after the peace of 1783, and studied law in the Temple. The observations of Price, Turgot, and Mably, suggested his pamphlet on "The Constitutions and Laws of the U.S.," which was much commended. He returned to Md. ab. 1785, and engaged in the practice of the law. Member of the Md. legisl., and of Congress in 1791–7. His name is conspicuous in the legislative annals of that period, few equalling him in eloquence, or the other qualifications of a member of a deliberative assembly. App. by Washington in 1797, min.-pleni. to Batavian republic, he restored the harmony which had been interrupted by the influence of France, and was app. by Pres. Adams sole envoy-extraordinary to the French republic. Judge Ellsworth and Gov. Davie were afterwards assoc. with him. Mr. Murray assisted in making the convention which was signed at Paris, Sept. 30, 1800, between America and France; then returned to his station as minister resident at the Hague, and in Dec. 1801 to his own country.

He raised a company in 1775; was app. col. Aug. 31 of a regt. of minute-men, and was actively engaged in repelling British inroads until Sept. 18, 1780, when he was made dep. qmr.-gen. for N.J. Early in 1777 he planned and successfully executed the surprise of a British post at Bennett's Island. Member Old Congress 1778–9. In the N.J. convention to ratify the Federal Constitution, Col. N. was its zealous and influential advocate.

Nelson, ALBERT HOBART, judge, b. Milford, Ms., March 12, 1812; d. McLean Asylum, Somerville, Ms., June 27, 1858. H.U. 1832. Son of Dr. John Nelson. Adm. to the bar, he practised law in Concord until 1842, when he removed to Woburn, and had his office in Boston. He was several years dist. atty. for Middlesex and Essex; State senator 1848–9; in 1855 one of the exec. council; and a few months afterward was app. chief justice of the Superior Court.

Nelson, DAVID, M.D., clergyman, b. near Jonesborough, Tenn., Sept. 24, 1793; d. Oakland, Ill., Oct. 17, 1844. Wash. Coll., Va., 1810. He studied medicine in Danville, Ky., and the Phila. Med. School. As surgeon of a Ky. regt., he went to Canada in the war of 1812. On his return he was found nearly dead of fatigue and hunger by his relative Col. Allen. Returning from infidelity to his first religious convictions, he forsook a lucrative professional career to become a Presb. minister; and was licensed to preach Apr. 1825. He preached 3 years in different parts of Tenn., and was engaged in the publication of the Calvinistic Mag. In 1828 he succeeded his bro. Samuel as pastor of the Presb. church in Danville, Ky.; in 1830 he removed to Mo., and was greatly instrumental in establishing a college in Marion Co., of which he became first pres. In 1836 Dr. Nelson, who was a warm emancipationist, owing to a disturbance growing out of the slavery question, removed to the neighborhood of Quincy, Ill., and established an institute for the education of young men as missionaries. This, like the former institution, failed, partly from Dr. Nelson's want of business qualifications. Author of "Cause and Cure of Infidelity," which has passed through many editions; besides many contributions to the public journals of the day. — Sprague.

Nelson, HUGH, minister to Spain in 1823–25, b. Va.; d. Albemarle Co. Mar. 18, 1836. Wm. and Mary Coll. 1785–90. He had been speaker of the house of delegates of Va.; judge of the Gen. Court; and M.C. 1811–23.

Nelson, CAPT. JOHN, a patriotic citizen of Ms., who headed the party that took prisoner Gov. Andros in 1689. Was a near relative to Sir Thos. Temple. Hutchinson tells us that he was not allowed any share in the subsequent govt., on account of his being an Episcopalian. While on a trading-voyage to Nova Scotia, he was taken by the French, and imprisoned in Quebec. While there, he wrote a letter, dated Aug. 26, 1692, to the court of Ms., which gave particular information of the designs of the French, in consequence of which he was sent to France, where he remained in prison two years. Having found means to inform Sir Purbeck Temple of his condition, a demand was soon after made for his release or exchange. The immediate effect of this was his transfer to the Bastille as a person of consequence; but he was finally discharged, and returned to his family after an absence of 10 or 11 years. Savage says he d. prob. 4 Dec. 1721. — Eliot.

State Const. Conv. of 1821; and postmaster of Cortland; judge of the Circuit Court 1823–31; of the State Supreme Court 1831–7; chief justice 1837–45; app. judge U.S. Supreme Court, Feb. 14, 1845; d. Cooperstown, N.Y., Dec. 13, 1873.

Nelson, THOMAS, Revol. statesman and soldier, b. York Co., Va., Dec. 26, 1738; d. there Jan. 4, 1789. His father Wm., many years pres. of the council (d. Nov. 19, 1772, a. 60), sent him in his 14th year to Cambridge, Eng., where he was educated at Trinity Coll. While on his way home, he was elected, though scarce 21, a member of the house of burgesses. In his 24th year he m., and settled at Yorktown, where his family possessed valuable estates. Member of the first convention at Williamsburg, in Aug. 1774; in 1775 he was again a member of the prov. convention; and in July he was app. col. of the 2d Va. Regt., which he resigned upon being elected to the Cont. Congress. A conspicuous member of the convention which in May, 1776, framed a constitution for the State; and, July 4, signed the Decl. of Indep. He resigned his seat in Congress in May, 1777; in Aug. was app. com.-in-chief of the State forces, and soon after raised a troop of cavalry, with which he repaired to Phila. Resuming his duties in the legisl., he strongly opposed the proposition to sequestrate British property, on the ground that it would be an unjust retaliation of public wrongs on private individuals. Again in Congress in Feb. 1779, he was again obliged by indisposition to resign. In May, however, he was suddenly called upon to organize the militia to repel a marauding exped. of the enemy. A loan of $2,000,000 being called for by Va. in June, 1780, Gen. Nelson, on his personal security, raised a great portion of the loan. He also advanced money to pay 2 Va. regts., ordered South, which had refused to march until their arrears were discharged. His ample fortune was now so seriously impaired, that he was involved in pecuniary embarrassments in the latter part of his life. From June until Nov. 1781 he was gov. of the State, opposing the enemy, who were ravaging the State, with all the militia he could muster. At the siege of Yorktown, where he com. the Va. militia, he again displayed his disinterested patriotism by directing that his own splendid mansion, the supposed headquarters of Lord Cornwallis, should be bombarded. His services and those of his troops were highly commended in General Orders, Oct. 20, 1781. With an impaired constitution, he passed the rest of his days in retirement. He d. so poor, that his remaining possessions were sold to pay his debts. His statue is one of the 6 placed around the Washington Monument at Richmond, Va. Two of his bros. were officers of the Revol. army, — Maj. John and Wm. (maj. 7th Va. Regt. Feb. 29, 1776).

Nelson, THOMAS H., diplomatist, b. Mason Co., Ky., ab. 1824. Bro. of Gen. Wm. Removed early in life to Rockville, and subsequently to Terre Haute, Ind., where he has been prominent in law and in politics. Nelson, WILLIAM, chancellor; d. Williamsburg, Va., Mar. 8, 1813, a. 53. Wm. and Mary Coll. 1776–81. Prof. of law there in 1804–13.

Nelson, GEN. WILLIAM, b. Maysville, Ky., 1825; d. Louisville, Ky., Sept. 29, 1862. Bro. of Thomas, minister to Chili. Entering the navy in 1840, he com. a naval battery at the siege of Vera Cruz, and afterward served in the Mediterranean. Promoted to master in 1854, and lieut. in 1855; in 1858 he was ordered to "The Niagara" when she carried back to Africa the negroes taken from the slaver "Echo." At the outbreak of the civil war, he was on ordnance-duty at Washington; promoted to lieut.-com., and detailed to command the gunboats on the Ohio, he was soon detached from this duty, placed under the authority of the sec. of war, and ordered to Ky. He organized camp "Dick Robinson," between Garrardsville and Danville, and another at Washington, Mason Co.; was very successful in raising troops; and had several contests with the Confederates in Eastern Ky. Made brig.-gen. Sept. 16, 1861; he com. the 2d division of Gen. Buell's army at the battle of Shiloh; was wounded at the battle of Richmond, Ky.; and took com. at Louisville when it was menaced by Gen. Bragg's army; maj.-gen. of vols. July 17, 1862. He was shot by Gen. Jefferson C. Davis in a personal quarrel, occasioned by his overbearing disposition, and his harsh and unjust treatment of that officer.

Nelson, WOLFRED, M.D., a Canadian physician and patriot, b. Montreal, July 10, 1792; d. June 17, 1863. The son of an English commissariat officer. He studied medicine, and began practice in 1811 at St. Denis on the Richelieu River. During the war of 1812 he was surgeon of a batt. raised in that dist. In 1827 he represented Sorel in parliament. Believing his Canadian countrymen entitled to the same rights as their fellow-subjects in Great Britain, he took up arms in 1837, the year of the rebellion, and won the victory of St. Denis; but was captured, and exiled to Bermuda. He settled in Plattsburg, N.Y., in 1838; but, when the amnesty was declared in Aug. 1842, went to Montreal. Elected to parliament from Richelieu in 1844, and again in 1845; declining a third election, he was in 1851 made insp. of prisons, becoming chairman of the board in 1859. He was also pres. of the Coll. of Phys. and Surgeons for Lower Canada, and twice mayor of Montreal. ROBERT his bro., also a physician, in 1838 led an invading force into Canada, which was speedily overthrown. He withdrew to Cal., and subsequently practised in New York.

Nesmith, JOHN, manufacturer, b. Londonderry, N.H., Aug. 3, 1793; d. Oct. 15, 1869. He began life poor; was an apprentice in a country store; afterward went into business for himself with his bro. Thomas, and, removing to N.Y., built up a lucrative business. In 1831 they removed to Lowell, Ms., and invested largely in real estate and in manufactures. He was a large owner in the Merrimack Woolen Mills Co., and made a large sum by securing the supply of water in Winnipiseogee and Squam Lakes as reservoirs for the Lowell mills in dry
