He was long a clergyman at Montrose, Scotland, and influential in the Gen. Assembly from his powers of wit and argument. He openly favored the cause of the Colonies in their revol. struggle. Chosen pres. of Dick. Coll. on its establishment in 1783, he yielded to the urgency of Dr. Rush, and arrived at Phila. in June, 1785. Unable to prevail with the trustees for a proper system of education, he resigned the next year, designing to return to Scotland; changing his mind, he was re-elected in May, 1786; entered vigorously on the prosecution of his duties, performing the great labor of delivering four concurrent series of lectures on logic, the philosophy of the mind, belles-lettres, and systematic theology, and struggled ineffectually to bring the education of the times up to his standard. He was a man of decided ability and scholarship; possessed great humor, and an extraordinary memory. His posthumous works were pub. in 1806; his Memoirs, by Dr. Miller, 1840. — Sprague.

Nisbet, JAMES, editor and author, b. Scotland ab. 1800; d. 30 July, 1865, by the wreck of the "Bro. Jonathan" off Oregon. An unsuccessful novelist and journalist in Eng. and Australia, in 1855 he went to Cal., where he pub. "Annals of San Francisco," and was connected with the Chronicle and the Bulletin, of which, on the assassination of Mr. King, he became editor.

Nixon, GEN. JOHN, Revol. officer, b. Framingham, Ms., Mar. 11, 1727; d. Middlebury, Vt., Mar. 24, 1815. He served as a soldier at the capture of Louisburg in 1745; returned to his native place after 7 years' service in the army and navy; again entered the army as a capt., and fought at Ticonderoga when Abercrombie was defeated, and in the battle of Lake George. Afterward, falling into an ambuscade, he cut his way through the enemy, and escaped, but with the loss of nearly all his party. In the Revol. he led a company of minute-men at Lexington; and at Bunker's Hill, where he com. a regt., he received a wound from which he never entirely recovered. Made a brig.-gen. Aug. 9, 1776. At the battle of Stillwater, where he com. the first brigade, Ms. line, a cannon-ball passed so near his head as to impair permanently the sight of one eye and the hearing of one ear. In poor health, he resigned his commission, Sept. 12, 1780; in 1803 he removed with his children to Middlebury, Vt.

Nixon, COL. JOHN, Revol. officer, b. Westchester, Pa.; d. Phila. 1 Jan. 1809. A merchant and an ardent patriot of Phila., he com. a regt. on Long Island and at Valley Forge. Pres. of the Bank of N.A. 1782–1809.

Framingham, Ms., May 7, 1736; d. on the passage from Boston to Portland, Maine, Aug. 12, 1800; ensign in the French war in 1756; com. a company of minute-men in 1775; was afterward commissioned col. 6th Ms. Regt., and served through the war with bravery and efficiency. He removed to Southborough ab. 1784.

Noah, MAJOR MORDECAI MANUEL, editor and politician, b. Phila. July 19, 1785; d. New York, Mar. 22, 1851. His parents were Jews, and to that faith he adhered through life. Commencing life as an apprentice, he soon devoted himself to the study of the law; removed to Charleston, and took an active part in public affairs. In 1811 he was app. consul to Riga, and in 1813 to Morocco, with a mission to Algiers; he returned to the U.S. ab. 1816, and pub. the incidents of his foreign travel, 8vo, N.Y., 1819. Editor of the National Advocate, a Democ. journal in N.Y., until 1826; he was, while thus engaged, elected sheriff of the city and co.; in 1826 he established the N.Y. Inquirer, subsequently merged into the present Courier and Inquirer; in 1834 he established the Evening Star, but withdrew from the daily press, and established, in connection with Messrs. Deans and Howard, a weekly paper, named the Sunday Times. In addition to the office of sheriff, Maj. Noah was at one time the surveyor of the port, and judge of the Court of Sessions. He endeavored to form a settlement of Jews on Grand Island, in the Niagara River; but the scheme failed. In 1845 he delivered a discourse upon the Restoration of the Jews, and pub. a collection of his newspaper essays, entitled "Gleanings from a Gathered Harvest," 12mo, N.Y.; he also pub. a translation of the "Book of Jasher," 8vo, 1840; and was the author of several successful dramas, — "The Fortress of Sorrento," "Paul and Alexis," "She would be a Soldier," "Marion, or the Hero of Lake George," "The Grecian Captive," and "The Siege of Tripoli."

Noailles de (deh no'-äl'), LOUIS MARIE, vicomte, b. 17 Apr. 1756; d. 9 Jan. 1804. Second son of the Marshal De Mouchy. Adopting the military career, he became an excellent tactician, and com. the regt. Soissonnais in the army of Rochambeau, distinguishing himself at the capture of Yorktown, and being one of the commissioners to arrange the articles of capitulation. He was a bro.-in-law of Lafayette, and, imbibing an enthusiasm for liberty, was one of the nobles who, 13 July, 1789, resolved to divest themselves of their exclusive privileges, and sit with the tiers état. He had a principal share in the early part of the French revol. struggle; but in May, 1792, hopeless of the success of constitutional liberty, he resigned the com. of the advanced posts of the camp of Valenciennes, and withdrew to the U.S. Re-entering the French service, he went to St. Domingo in 1803 as gen. of brigade, but was mortally wounded in an action with an English vessel. His wife was a victim of the guillotine.

that inst. 1839–57. Author of a number of sermons, discourses, and orations.

North, Gen. William, b. Fort Frederick, Pemaquid, Me., 1755; d. New York, Jan. 3, 1836. Son of Capt. John of St. George's Fort, Thomaston, Me. Entering the Revol. army in 1775, he was a capt. in Jackson's regt. at the battle of Monmouth; became aide to Baron Steuben in 1779, assisting him in introducing his system of discipline into the army; accomp. him in Va., and at the surrender of Cornwallis, and, gaining the esteem of the baron, became heir to one-half his property. Adj. and insp.-gen. U.S.A. from July 19, 1798, to June, 1800 (rank of brig.-gen.). He was a conspicuous Federalist; was once speaker of the N.Y. Assembly; one of the first canal commiss. of the State; and U.S. senator in 1798. App. adj.-gen. of the army in 1812, but declined. He m. Polly, dau. of James Duane. — MS. Memoir, by Miss H. E. North.

North, William, b. Eng., some time a resident of N. York City; d. there by suicide, 1854. Contrib. many pieces in prose and verse to the periodicals. After his death, "The Slave of the Lamp," a novel by him, was pub. 1855.

Northend, Charles, b. Newbury, Ms. Principal of the Eppes School, Salem; teacher and supt. of schools at Danvers many years. Author of "Teacher and Parent," 12mo, 1853; Speakers and other school text-books. William D., his bro., is noted as a lawyer and politician of Salem.

Norton, Andrews, an eminent Unitarian scholar, b. Hingham, Ms., Dec. 31, 1786; d. Newport, R. I., Sept. 18, 1853. H. U. 1804. Descendant of Rev. John of Ipswich. He studied divinity, but never had charge of a congregation. Tutor in Bowd Coll. in 1809; and in 1811 at H.U., where he was also librarian in 1813–21; in 1813 succeeded Channing as lecturer on biblical criticism and interpretation; and was Dexter prof. of sacred literature in 1819–30; afterwards residing at Cambridge, devoting himself to intellectual pursuits. In 1833 he pub. his "Statement of Reasons for not believing the Doctrine of the Trinity;" in 1837 "Evidences of the Genuineness of the Gospels," succeeded by three other volumes; a treatise on "The Latest Form of Infidelity" (1839), which was answered by a champion of Transcendentalism, to whom Norton ably replied; and "Tracts concerning Christianity," 8vo, 1852. He was also a writer of verse of a devotional cast, and of great beauty and sweetness. He left in manuscript a Translation of the Gospels, pub. after his death; contrib. many valuable articles to the N.A. Review and the Christian Examiner; and edited in 1833–4, in connection with Charles Folsom, the Select Journal of Foreign Periodical Literature. In 1814 he edited the Miscellaneous Writings of his friend Charles Eliot, and in 1823 performed a similar friendly duty for Levi Frisbee. "In his theological views and writings Mr. Norton united opposite schools of thought, and belonged, by an almost equal title, to the extreme right and the extreme left as to matters of religious belief. He was radical as a critic and interpreter, conservative as an expositor of Christian doctrine. While leading the van in the Unitarian protest against Calvinism, he was foremost in opposition to the naturalistic school, of which Theodore Parker was the principal representative. As a lecturer on the interpretation of Scripture he has had few equals, and no superior, in this country." In 1812 he edited the General Repository and Review, illustrating and defending with ability the views of the liberal school of theology. His son Charles Eliot (H. U. 1846) has been editor of the N.A. Review, and has pub. "Notes of Travel and Study in Italy," and a transl. of Dante's "New Life."

Norton, Asahel Strong, D.D. (Un. Coll. 1815), b. Farmington, Ct., 20 Sept. 1765; d. Clinton, N.Y., May 10, 1853. Y.Coll. 1790. Ord. at Clinton 1793. Son of Col. Ichabod, and Ruth Strong. For 40 years he exerted an important influence in Western N.Y., and was one of the founders of Ham. Coll. at Clinton.

Norton, Chapple, a British gen., b. 1746; d. Mar. 19, 1818. Son of Fletcher Norton, 1st Lord Grantley. App. capt. 19th Foot, June, 1763; maj. July, 1769; capt. and lieut.-col. Coldstream Guards, June, 1774; brev. col. Nov. 17, 1780; gen. April, 1802. He came to New York in Aug. 1779, and was prominent in all the principal subsequent occurrences of the war, receiving frequent and honorable mention. He was long the representative of Guildford in parliament; gov. of Charlemont, and col. 56th Regt.

Norton, John, clergyman, b. at Bishops Stortford, Hertfordshire, Eng., May 6, 1606; d. Boston, Ms., April 5, 1663. Educated at Cambridge U. He was afterward curate of Stortford. Becoming a Puritan, he came to Plymouth, N.E., in Oct. 1635; preached there during the winter; went to Boston in 1636; and, before the close of the year, became minister of the church at Ipswich. He assisted in forming the Cambridge platform in 1648; returned to Boston in 1652; and in 1662 went with Simon Bradstreet as agent to address Charles II. after his restoration. The king assured them that he would confirm the charter, but required that justice should be administered in his name; and that all persons of good moral character should be admitted to the Lord's Supper, and their children to baptism. This was exceedingly offensive to the colonists, who treated the agents on their return so coolly, that it is said to have hastened the death of Mr. Norton. He wrote an answer to a number of questions relating to church govt. sent over from Holland by Apollonius, — the first Latin prose book written in this country; also a treatise against the Quakers, entitled "The Heart of New England rent by the Blasphemies of the Present Generation," encouraging the magistrates in the persecution of the Quakers, which so exasperated them, that, after his death, they represented to the king and parliament that "John Norton, chief priest in Boston, by the immediate power of the Lord was smitten, and died." He also wrote the "Life and Death of that Deservedly Famous Man of God, Mr. John Cotton," Lond. 1658; "Doctrine of Godliness," 1648; "Sufferings of Christ," 8vo, 1653; "The Orthodox Evangelist," 4to, 1654.

Losing both parents while a boy, he lived with his bro., the Rev. Samuel Nott, at Franklin, Ct., where he taught school in the winter. Licensed to preach in 1795, he labored during the first year of his ministry at Cherry Valley, in the double relation of pastor, and principal of the acad. From 1798 to 1804 he was pastor of a Presb. church at Albany, and in 1804 was elected pres. of Union Coll.; after which period his history was identified with that of the institution. While at Albany, he acquired popularity as a preacher; and among his most successful pulpit-efforts was a sermon on the death of Hamilton. In 1854 the semi-centennial anniversary of his presidency was celebrated, when between 600 and 700 of those who had graduated under him came together to do him honor. Dr. Nott, by his experiments in heat, and the improvements he introduced in stoves, effected an entire change in the mode of warming buildings. His publications consist principally of sermons and addresses, delivered in the middle period of life, when his reputation as a pulpit-orator was at its height. He was an earnest advocate of the temperance cause, and pub. "Lectures on Temperance," 1847. He also pub. "Counsels to Young Men," miscellaneous works, 8vo, 1810.

Nott, HENRY JUNIUS, scholar and author, son of Judge Abraham, b. on the Pacolet River, Union Dist., S.C., Nov. 4, 1797; drowned off the coast of N.C. Oct. 13, 1837. S.C. Coll. 1814. On his return from a brief visit to Europe in 1818, he was adm. to the bar, and became law-partner with D. J. Maccord, with whom he edited 2 vols. of Reports of Cases in the Constitutional Court in 1818, '19, and '20. Sailing again to Europe in 1821 for his health, while absent was elected to the chair of criticism, logic, and the philos. of language, in the S.C. Coll. Here he remained 13 years; at the same time being a contrib. to the Southern Review. He made a collection of his "Novellettes of a Traveller," 2 vols. N.Y. 1834, chiefly humorous; and left nearly completed, at his death, an historical romance. In 1837 he visited New York; took passage thence in the steamer "Home," and, with his wife, perished in its wreck.

Nuñez, ALVAR (CABECA DE VACA), the earliest and most remarkable explorer of N.A.; d. 1564. With Nuñez as chief officer, Pamphilo de Narvaez sailed for Florida from San Lucar de Barrameda, with 5 ships and 600 men, July 17, 1527; landing on its coast Apr. 12, 1528. Directing the flotilla to follow the coast westward to a certain haven, and there await his coming, Narvaez, accompanied by Nuñez, entered the interior. They found the Indians hostile; a country possessing few attractions; suffered much from sickness; were disappointed in their expectation of finding gold; and reached the coast, sick and disheartened, only to find no fleet there; the officer in charge of the ships having sailed for Havana without making any effort to reach the place of rendezvous, leaving the gov. and his companions to their fate. The party, reduced to 242 men, embarked, Sept. 20, in 5 boats of their own construction, which were so crowded, that they were managed with the greatest difficulty. After much suffering from hunger and thirst, from attacks by the Indians, from violent tempests and severe cold, they, late in Oct., reached the mouth of a large river (supposed to be the Mpi.), and landed on an island. Continuing their voyage, a violent storm drove them out to sea, wrecking the boat containing Nuñez on a small island, from which the survivors reached the mainland. The rest of their companions were never afterwards heard of. After extraordinary hardships, in which they were driven to such straits that they lived upon one another, they reached a mountainous country believed to have been New Mexico. They met with buffalo; and, finding an epidemic among the Indians, were remarkably successful in curing them, gaining thereby a great influence over the natives, who imagined them to be from the sun. Taking advantage of this, they endeavored to instil into their minds the doctrines of Christianity. After 8 months among the Indians of New Mexico, Nuñez journeyed westward and southward until 1536, when, with 3 survivors, he reached the Spanish settlements in Culiacan, on the shores of the Pacific. An abridgment of Cabeca de Vaca's "Narrative" may be found in Hakluyt's "Voyages," and a French version in the collection of voyages pub. in Paris by Ternaux Compans; but the fullest and best is a translation by Buckingham Smith, sec. of the U.S. legation in Spain (privately printed), folio, Washington, 1851.

Nuttall, DR. THOMAS, naturalist, b. Yorkshire, Eng., 1786; d. St. Helen's, Lancashire, Eng., Sept. 10, 1859. Brought up a printer. Oswald, COL. ELEAZER, b. Eng. ab. 1755; d. New York, Oct. 1, 1795, of yellow-fever. He was of good family, being related to Richard of Auchencruive. His sympathies were awakened by the action of the Sons of Liberty in America as early as 1770, and he soon after came to America; served as a capt. under Arnold, and at the capture of Ticonderoga, and became Arnold's sec.; he exhibited great bravery at the siege of Quebec at the close of 1775, where he com. the forlorn hope after Arnold was wounded; in 1777 he was made a lieut.-col. in Lamb's regt. of artillery, and soon afterwards disting. himself with Arnold at Compo. For his bravery at the battle of Monmouth he was highly commended by Generals Knox and Lee; soon after this engagement he left the service. He engaged in the printing and publishing business at Phila., and was app. public printer. Upon constitutional questions he was an opponent of Hamilton, whom in 1789 he challenged to fight a duel; their friends adjusted the matter, and the meeting was prevented. In 1792, being in Eng. on business, he went to the Continent, joined the French army, and com. a regt. of art. at the battle of Jemappes.

Oswald, RICHARD of Auchencruive, b. 1705; d. Nov. 6, 1784. One of the framers of the treaty of peace which closed the Revol. war. He was a merchant of Lond., and gave bail for Henry Laurens in the sum of £50,000. He m. Mary Ramsay, celebrated by Burns in one of his songs.

Otey, JAMES HERVEY, D.D. (Col. Coll. 1833), Pr.-Ep. bishop of Tenn., b. Liberty Va., Jan. 27, 1800; d. Memphis, Tenn., Apr. 23, 1863. U. of N. C. 1820. Ord. 1825, and was the first Prot.-Episc. minister who settled in Tenn.; consec. bishop Jan. 14, 1834; and did duty in Mpi., La., and Ala., among the Indians, &c. Throughout the South and Southwest his title was, "the Good Bishop." Though strongly opposed to secession, he was persuaded to write his famous letter to the sec. of state, remonstrating against coercive measures on the part of the Federal govt.: the able reply to this letter changed the views of "the Good Bishop," who thenceforth acted with the Northern diocese. Author of numerous addresses, sermons, charges, speeches, &c., and a vol. entitled "Unity of the Church," &c., 8vo, 1852.

Otis, HARRISON GRAY, statesman and orator, b. Boston, Oct. 8, 1765; d. there Oct. 28, 1848. H.U. 1783. Son of Samuel A., and nephew of James Otis. Adm. to the bar 1786, he soon became a successful lawyer, and entered upon public life, where his brilliant talents, graceful oratory, and extensive acquirements, gained him great éclat. Aide to Gen. Brooks in the Shays Insurrection in 1786; member of the legisl. in 1796; M.C. and a prominent leader of the Federal party in 1797–1801; U.S. dist.-atty. 1801; member of the legisl. and speaker 1803–5; pres. of the State senate 1805–11; judge of C. C. P. 1814–18; U.S. senator 1817–22; mayor of Boston 1829–32. He was a prominent member of the Hartford Convention in Dec. 1814, the views and proceedings of which he afterwards wrote, and pub. a series of letters upon. In the U.S. senate he made an eloquent speech in reply to Pinckney on the Mo. Question in Jan. 1820. He pub. an oration, July 4, 1788; letter to W. Heath 1798; eulogy on Hamilton 1804; speech on the Mo. Question 1820; on the Sedition Law; addresses in Boston 1824 and 1830.

Otis, JAMES, col. and judge, b. Barnstable, June 14, 1702; d. Nov. 9, 1778. Son of Judge John Otis, and, without the advantages of a regular education, rose by the native energy of his mind to distinction. A diligent study of the principles of law, as connected with political institutions, had prepared him as an opponent of the ministerial plans against the Colonies, and he ardently engaged in asserting their rights; a member of the Prov. legisl. in 1758; made speaker of the house in 1760; and continued in that office two years, when he was negatived by Gov. Bernard. On the death of Chief Justice Sewall in 1760, Col. Otis, seconded by his son James, applied to Gov. Bernard for the app. of assoc. judge. Mr. Hutchinson, who was nominated, attributes to their disappointment the "flaming patriotism" of the father and son. In 1763 he was app. judge of probate for Barnstable Co.; chief justice of the C. C. P. Feb. 1764; the same year he was chosen speaker of the house, and also one of his Majesty's council, but was negatived by the gov., owing to his opposition to the measures of govt. He was elected to the council every succeeding year, and was negatived regularly until 1770, when Lieut.-Gov. Hutchinson approbated the choice. During the first years of the war, Mr. Otis sat at the council board, of which he was pres. and the oldest member.

Otis, JAMES, orator and Revol. patriot, b. W. Barnstable, Ms., 5 Feb. 1725; d. Andover, Ms., 23 May, 1783. H.U. 1743. Son of the preceding. He studied law with J. Gridley; at 21 began practice at Plymouth; removed to Boston in 1750, and acquired a high reputation at the bar; in 1755 he m. Ruth Cunningham. In 1760 he pub. "Rudiments of Latin Prosody." Otis's public career dates from his famous speech against the "Writs of Assistance" in 1761; chosen to the legisl. in May, 1761, he became the leader of the popular party; in 1764 he pub. a pamphlet, "The Rights of the Colonies Vindicated," a masterpiece of argument. June 6, 1765, he moved the calling of a congress of delegates from the several Colonies, which was adopted, and to which he was in Oct. a delegate, and one of the com. to prepare an address to the commons of Eng. Elected speaker of the house in May, 1767, he was negatived by the gov., and resigned his office of judge-advocate. Upon the requirement of Gov. Bernard that the legisl. should rescind its Circular Letter requesting the Colonies to unite on some suitable mode of redress, Otis made a speech, pronounced by his enemies as the "most violent, abusive, and treasonable declaration that perhaps was ever uttered." The house refused to rescind by a vote of 92 to 17. In the summer of 1769 he denounced in, the Gazette, in severe terms, the calumnies of some of the customs-officers; who attacked him Sept. 9, and inflicted a deep cut on his head, to which has been partly attributed the derangement under which he afterwards labored. He obtained a verdict against Robinson, one of his assailants, for £2,000, which he gave up on receiving a written apology, and withdrew to the country in 1770 on account of his health. He was again a representative in 1771, but took no active part in affairs subsequently, his mind having become seriously impaired. During a brief lucid interval he resumed practice in Boston, but, 6 weeks after his return to Andover, was killed by a stroke of lightning, — a fate for which he had often expressed a wish. Otis's great defect was his irascibility. He was a man of powerful genius and ardent temper, of impetuous and commanding eloquence, and, as a lawyer, stood at the head of the profession. He pub., besides the works named, "Vindication of the House of Representatives," 1762; and "Considerations," &c., 1765. — See Tudor's Life of Otis, 8vo, 1823.

Otis, COL. JOHN, judge, b. Hingham, Ms., 1657; d. Barnstable, Ms., Sept. 23, 1727. John his father was in Hingham in 1635; went to Scituate ab. 1662; and d. 1684, a. 64. Col. Otis was 20 years the representative of Barnstable; councillor 1706–27; many years com. the militia of the county; was chief justice of the C.C.P., and first judge of probate. He had fine talents, and possessed great wit and humor.

Otis, SAMUEL ALLEYNE, bro. of James, b. Barnstable, Nov. 24, 1740; d. at Washington, Apr. 22, 1814. H.U. 1759. He commenced the study of law, but abandoned it, and engaged in mercantile pursuits in Boston; representative to the Gen. Court in 1776, and a member of the convention which framed the State constitution; during the Revol. he was a member of the board of war, and in 1784 speaker of the house; in 1787 he was app. one of the commiss. to negotiate with the insurgents in the Shays Rebellion; member of Congress in 1788; and, after the adoption of the Federal Constitution, was chosen sec. of the U.S. senate. He m. Elizabeth, only dau. of Harrison Gray, receiver-gen. of Ms. (who d. 1794, a. 84), and was the father of H. G. Otis.

Otterbein, PHILIP WILLIAM, founder of the Church of the United Brethren, b. Dillenburg, Germany, June 4, 1726; d. Baltimore, Md., Nov. 17, 1813. He also pub. 3 vols. of Commentaries on the Gospels.

Owen, ROBERT, philanthropist, b. Newtown, Montgomeryshire, Scotland, 14 March, 1771; d. there 19 Nov. 1858. He acquired wealth by the manuf. of cotton, and, sympathizing with the working-classes, he, with his father-in-law and partner, David Dale, introduced reforms in regard to their dwellings, their hours of labor, and the education of their children. In 1812 he pub. "New View of Society," maintaining a theory of modified communism. Wishing to test his system on a large scale, he in 1825 purchased New Harmony, Ind., and, with the assistance of his son Robert Dale Owen, tried it there. It flourished for a time; but as a social experiment it was a failure, as was also his effort to establish in London a "labor exchange." In 1828 he went to Mex., but could effect nothing there; in 1829 he held a public debate at Cincin. with Alexander Campbell of Bethany on "The Evidences of Christianity," pub. 2 vols. 8vo, 1829. He received an academical education; was a practical farmer, and, during the intervals of public duty, resided upon and cultivated the old homestead farm left him by his ancestors. Assessor of the direct tax, 5th dist., N.H., 1815; member of the legisl. 1818–20 and 1835; register of deeds, Grafton Co., 1828–34; U.S. senator 1836–7; State councillor 1838. He was a leading Mason.

Page, Thomas Jefferson, commander U.S.N., b. Va. ab. 1815. Midshipman in 1827; lieut. in June, 1833; and com. Sept. 1855. The early part of his service was in the coast-survey. In 1853–May, 1856, he com. an exped. to explore the River La Plata, a narrative of which was pub. N.Y., 8vo, 1859; and in 1857–Dec. 1860, made an exploration of the Parana and the tributaries of the Paraguay.

Page, William, painter, b. Albany, Jan. 23, 1811. He went with his parents to N.Y. City in 1819, and at the age of 11 received a premium from the Amer. Institute for a drawing in India ink. After passing nearly a year with Herring, a portrait-painter, he became a pupil of S. F. B. Morse; was adm. a student of the acad., and received the premium of a large silver medal for his drawings from the antique. He spent a year in Albany, painting portraits, excelling in the brillancy of his color and the accuracy of his drawing. Adm. a member of the National Acad., he was app. to paint the portraits of Gov. Marcy and John Quincy Adams. Besides portraits, he has executed several historical compositions, a "Holy Family," now in the Boston Athenæum; "The Wife's Last Visit to her Condemned Husband," and "The Infancy of Henri IV." He resided some time in Boston, where he painted a great number of portraits; returned to New York, where he remained 2 years; and then went to Europe, residing 11 yrs. in Florence and Rome. He returned in the autumn of 1860 to New York, where he now resides. In Italy he painted many portraits, produced his two "Venuses," his "Moses and Aaron on Mount Horeb," the "Flight into Egypt," the "Infant Bacchus," and other works. His copies of Titian were so remarkably like the originals, that one of them was stopped by the authorities of Florence under the belief that it was the original painting. Since his return to New York, he has delivered a course of lectures on art, and has pub. a "New Method of Measuring the Human Body," based upon the models of the antique.

Paige, Alonzo Christopher, jurist, b. Scaghticoke, N.Y., July 31, 1797; d. Schenectady, N.Y., Mar. 31, 1868. Wms. Coll. 1812. His father, Rev. Paine, Martyn, M.D. (H.U. 1816), LL.D., physician, son of Elijah, b. Williamstown, Vt., July 8, 1794. H.U. 1813. He studied medicine with Dr. John Warren of Boston, and practised in Montreal, Canada, in 1816–22; then removed to N.Y., and acquired a large practice. In 1832, during the prevalence of cholera, he wrote a series of letters upon the disease to Dr. J. C. Warren, subsequently pub. as "The Cholera Asphyxia of N.Y." He has pub. "Medical and Physiological Commentaries," 3 vols. 1840–4; "Materia Medica and Therapeutics," 1842; "The Institutes of Medicine," 1847; "The Soul and Instinct distinguished from Materialism," 1848, subsequently incorporated in the "Institutes of Medicine;" and in 1852 a Memoir of his son, Robert Troup. In 1856 Dr. Paine contrib. an elaborate essay on "Theoretical Geology" to the Prot.-Epis. Quarterly Review, controverting the geological interpretations of the Mosaic narrations of creation and the flood. In 1841 Dr. Paine and others established the University Med. Coll., in which he for many years held the chair of the institutes of medicine and materia medica, and subsequently that of therapeutics and materia medica. In 1854 he was prominent in effecting a repeal of the law prohibiting dissections of the human body. Member of many of the principal learned societies in Europe and America; d. N. Y. City, Nov. 8, 1877.

Paine, Robert, D.D., bishop of the M.E. Church South, b. N.C. 1799. Emigrated to Tenn. in 1813. Nashville U. 1826. He entered the Tenn. conf. in 1819; pres. of Lagrange Coll., Ala., 1830–46, and then chosen bishop. Eminent both as a pulpit orator, and as presiding officer in the annual conference. Resides in Mpi. Author of a work on Hopkinsianism, and "Life and Times of Bishop McKendree," 2 vols. 8vo.

Paine, Robert Treat, LL.D. (H.U. 1805), signer of the Decl. of Indep., b. Boston, March 11, 1731; d. there May 11, 1814. H.U. 1749. His father Thomas had been pastor of a church in Weymouth, but was afterward a merchant of Boston. His mother was the dau. of Samuel Treat, and grand-dau. of Samuel Willard. After graduating, he kept school to help support his parents, for whose maintenance he also made a voyage to Europe. He then studied theology, and in 1755 acted as chaplain to the Northern provincial troops, but afterward studied the law. On his admission to the bar in 1759, he established himself at Taunton, where he resided many years. In 1770 he conducted with great ability and ingenuity, in the absence of the atty.-gen., the prosecution of Capt. Preston and his men for the Boston Massacre. In 1773 he was a representative; was a delegate to the Prov. Congress in 1774–5; a member of the Cont. Congress in 1774–8, rendering important services upon various committees. In 1776 he, with 2 others, was deputed by Congress to visit the army of Schuyler in the North; speaker of the Ms. h. of reps. in 1777; atty.-gen. of Ms. on the organization of the State, and also a member of the exec. council; in 1779 he was a member of the State Const. Conv., and one of the com. which prepared the draught of it; and was app. judge of the Supreme Court in 1776, but declined. He removed to Boston ab. 1780, and was judge of the Ms. Supreme Court in 1790–1804. Paine's legal attainments were great: he ranked high as a lawyer; was an able and impartial judge; an excellent scholar; and was noted for the brilliancy of his wit. A founder of the Amer. Acad. of Ms. in 1780.

Paine, Robert Treat, poet, b. Taunton, Ms., Dec. 9, 1773; d. Boston, Nov. 13, 1811. H.U. 1792. Son of the preceding, and was originally named Thomas, but, desirous of possessing a "Christian" name, had it changed by the legisl. in 1801. Abandoning mercantile pursuits after a brief trial, he established in Oct. 1794 a political and literary paper, the Federal Orrery, in which appeared "The Jacobiniad," and also "The Lyars;" their personalities procuring him many enemies, and occasioning assaults on his person. He had written verses for the Ms. Mag., and subsequently wrote theatrical criticisms. In Feb. 1795 he m. Miss Baker, an actress. Paine had a prolific imagination, was bold in his views, quick at retort, witty, and exceedingly sarcastic. His "Invention of Letters," 1795, was greatly admired; and Washington expressed in a letter to him his appreciation of its merits. He received for this poem $1,500; and for "The Ruling Passion," intended as a gallery of portraits, $1,200. In 1798 Paine wrote the celebrated national song, "Adams and Liberty," — a patriotic effusion which brought him more than 11 dollars a line. In 1799 he delivered an oration on the first anniversary of the dissolution of the alliance with France; and, turning his attention to the study of law under Judge Parsons, was adm. to the Suffolk bar in 1802; retired from the profession in 1809; and soon after became an inmate of his father's mansion in Boston, where he wrote "The Steeds of Apollo," his last famous effusion. Jan. 2, 1800, he delivered at Newburyport a eulogy on Washington. His writings, with a Biography by Charles Prentiss, were pub. 8vo, 1812.

Paine, Thomas, political and deistical writer, b. Thetford, Norfolk, Eng., 29 Jan. 1737; d. New York, 8 June, 1809. His father was a Quaker, and brought up his son to his own trade, that of stay-maker. At the grammar-school of Thetford he obtained some knowledge of mathematics. He worked at his trade, preached occasionally as a dissenting minister, married, and settled in Sandwich in 1759. In 1764 he became an exciseman; was afterward a teacher, then a tobacconist; failed in business in 1774, and went to London. By the advice of Dr. Franklin he came to America, arriving in Phila. in Dec. 1774. In 1775 he edited the Pa. Mag.; Oct. 18 he pub. in Bradford's Pa. Journal "Serious Thoughts upon Slavery," &c., expressing the hope that the legisl. would put a stop to the importation of negroes, ameliorate the condition of the slaves, and ultimately provide for their freedom. In his celebrated pamphlet called "Common Sense," which appeared in Jan. 1776, he advocated independence, contributing in an extraordinary degree to the dissemination of republican ideas. It procured him a reward of £500 from the legisl. of Pa., the honorary degree of M.A. from its university, and membership in the Philos. Society. Joining the army in the autumn of 1776, he was a short time aide to Gen. Greene. Dec. 19, 1776, — a most gloomy period of the war, — Paine pub. his first "Crisis," opening with the since familiar phrase, "These are the times that try men's souls." It revived the drooping ardor of the people, was read at the head of every regt., and bore fruit in the battles of Trenton and Princeton a few days later. This publication was continued till April, 1783. He was sec. to the com. on foreign affairs in Congress from Apr. 1777 to Jan. 1779, losing his place for having in the Phila. Packet denied the validity of Silas Deane's claims upon the govt. In Jan. 1780, when financial ruin impended, he gave $500, the amount of his salary as clerk of the Assembly of Pa., to start a relief-fund. In Feb. 1781 he went with Col. Laurens to France to negotiate a loan, and returned Aug. 25 with $2,500,000 in silver. In 1782 he pub. a "Letter to the Abbé Raynal," correcting the mistakes in his account of the Amer. Revol., and soon afterwards a "Letter to the Earl of Shelburne," who had prophesied, that, "when Britain shall acknowledge Amer. independence, the sun of Britain's glory is set forever." For his Revol. services, Congress in 1785 gave him $3,000; and the State of N.Y. granted him 500 acres of land in New Rochelle. In Apr. 1787 he went to England, and invented an iron bridge, the prototype of so many similar structures, one of which was built at Rotherham, Yorkshire. Visiting Paris, he pub., under the name of Duchatelet, a tract recommending the abolition of royalty. In Mar. 1791 he wrote, in answer to Burke's "Reflections on the French Revol.," his celebrated "Rights of Man," which attained great popularity. For this work he was outlawed in Eng., but in Sept. 1792 was elected a member of the French National Convention. Acting with the Girondists, and opposing the execution of the king, he incurred the hatred of the Jacobins, and ab. the end of 1793 was expelled from the Convention as a foreigner; was cast into prison, and narrowly escaped death in the Reign of Terror. In Nov. 1794 he was released through the influence of Mr. Monroe, in whose house he resided 18 months, and resumed his seat in the Convention Dec. 8. In 1795 appeared his "Age of Reason," which, though denounced as atheistical, expressly inculcates a belief in God. He came to the U.S. in Oct. 1802, finally settling in New York, and occasionally passing a few months on his estate at New Rochelle. At Monticello, whither he was invited by Jefferson, he left a favorable impression, and was cordially received at Washington. He was intemperate in the latter part of his life, which was passed in comparative obscurity. In 1819 Wm. Cobbett took his remains to Eng. A monument was erected to his memory in 1839, near his original burial-place. The writings of Paine have the merit of sincerity and boldness, and have been the object of vituperation rather than of controversy. His services to mankind as a political writer, and especially his powerful exertions to promote the independence of America, constitute a high claim upon the gratitude of his adopted country. Among his other writings are "The Decline and Fall of the English System of Finance," "Letter to Geo. Washington" (accusing him of ingratitude in not attempting to procure his liberation from the Luxembourg Prison), "Agrarian Justice," &c. The most complete edition of his works

Palmer, ERASTUS DOW, sculptor, b. Pompey, Onondaga Co., N.Y., April 2, 1817. He was a carpenter in Utica until 29 years of age, when he commenced cameo-cutting, and removed to Albany, where he still resides. Dissatisfied with this pursuit, which injured his eyesight, he, at the age of 35, became a sculptor. His first work in marble was an ideal bust of the infant "Ceres," exhibited at the N.Y. Academy of Design: it was followed by two bas-reliefs, representing the morning and evening star; by a statue of life-size, representing an Indian girl holding a crucifix; also statues of "The Sleeping Peri," "The Little Peasant," and "The White Captive," a nude figure of a girl bound to a tree. All these are original works, and are disting. by careful workmanship. His largest work is a design of "The Landing of the Pilgrims," embodying 15 statues, and intended for the Capitol at Washington. Among his bas-reliefs are "Faith," "Immutability," "The Spirit's Flight," "Sappho," and "Remorse;" and of his ideal busts the principal are "Resignation,"

Papineau, Louis Joseph, a Canadian political leader, b. Montreal, Oct. 1789; d. Montebello, 23 Sept. 1871. His father, a notary-public, and a member of the first legisl. Assembly of Lower Can. after the establishment of the constitution of 1791, educated him at the Sem. of Quebec. Adm. to the bar; entered parliament in 1809; succeeded his father in 1814 as a dep. from Montreal; and in 1815 was speaker of the house. Already a leader of the radical party, Lord Dalhousie, to neutralize his popularity, app. him to the exec. council; but he never appeared at its sittings, and continued in opposition. In 1823, when the English party aimed at the union of the two Canadas, he was sent on a mission to London to remonstrate against that measure. In 1827 he was re-elected to the house, and re-chosen speaker. Rather than sanction this choice, Lord Dalhousie adjourned the parliament. A list of the demands and grievances of L. Canada were introduced by him to the house in 1834, and known as the 92 resolutions. He supported them energetically, urged a constitutional resistance to the imperial govt., and recommended commercial non-intercourse with Eng. The new governor, Gosford, having decided in 1837 upon administering the province without the assistance of the colonial parliament, its sudden prorogation brought on the crisis; and the liberal party took up arms. This, however, Papineau did not approve; and in a great popular meeting, Oct. 23, 1837, he insisted that constitutional and peaceful resistance would alone be of avail to Canada. His advice was not heeded, and, after the events of Nov. and Dec. 1837, he took refuge in the U.S., and in 1839 went to France, engaging for some years in literary pursuits. After the union of the Canadas in 1840, a general amnesty for political offences was granted; and Papineau, against whom a warrant for high treason had been issued, returned in 1847 to his native country. His popularity secured his return to the Canadian parliament; but he had since 1854 taken no prominent part in political affairs.

Paredes, Mariano, Mexican gen., d. city of Mexico, Sept. 11, 1849. When, upon the annexation of Texas to the U.S., Pres. Herrera endeavored to bring the Mexicans to acquiesce in this result, Paredes opposed the movement, and, with 25,000 men, defeated Santa Añia, who was banished. Paredes, with the aid of Arista, deposed Herrera; and June 12, 1845, was installed pres. On the following day he took com. of the army, leaving the administration in the hands of the vice-president, Bravo. He was at the head of affairs on the breaking-out of the war with the U.S. in May, 1846: but, on the return of Santa Añia in Aug. 1846, Bravo assumed the title of provis.-pres.; and Paredes was seized and confined, but afterwards escaped to Havana. Parker, NATHAN, D.D. (Bowd. Coll. 1823), Cong. minister, b. Reading, Ms., June 5, 1782; d. Portsmouth, Nov. 8, 1833. H.U. 1803. He spent one year in teaching at Worcester, Ms.; studied theology; in 1805 was app. tutor in Bowd. Coll.; was settled in Portsmouth, Sept. 14, 1808; and in 1833 Rev. Andrew P. Peabody was ord. his colleague; when the division of the Cong. body in N.E. into two parties was recognized, he took part as a professed Unitarian. Henry Ware, jun., pub. a vol. of his sermons with a Memoir, 1835.

Parker, SIR PETER, a British adm., b. 1721; d. Dec. 21, 1811. Son of Adm. Christopher Parker. He became a post-capt. in 1747; and in 1775, in "The Bristol," of 50 guns, proceeded with a squadron under his com. to co-operate with Gen. Clinton in the attack of Charleston, S.C. Arriving at Cape Fear in May, on June 28, 1776, he made an unsuccessful attack on Fort Moultrie, resulting in great loss and damage to his fleet, and to the abandonment of the enterprise. For his bravery in this affair he received the honor of knighthood. He aided Lord Howe in the capture of New York, and com. the squadron which took possession of R. I. in the latter part of 1776. He held the chief com. on the Jamaica station in 1777–82; was made a bart. 26 Dec. 1782; subsequently became com. in chief at Portsmouth; M.P. for Maldon; admiral of the White; and on the death of Lord Howe, as the oldest admiral in the navy, he became admiral of the fleet. His grandson SIR PETER (b. 1786) disting. himself as capt. of "The Menelaus," frigate; and in 1814 sailed up the Chesapeake to destroy an Amer. camp at Bellair. He landed his men, and gallantly attacked the Americans, but was killed in the affair 30 Aug. 1814.

Parker, COL. RICHARD, Revol. officer of Va.; d. at the siege of Charleston, S.C., 24 Apr. 1780; capt. 2d Va. Regt. 24 Jan. 1776; afterward col. 8th Va. Regt.

Parker, RICHARD E., jurist, of Va., b. 1777; d. Nov. 1840; member of the h. of delegates; many years a judge of the Gen. and Circuit Courts of Va., also of the Supreme Court of Appeals; and in 1836–7 U.S. senator.

Parker, RICHARD GREEN, b. Boston, 1798. H.U. 1817. Son of Bishop Samuel. After teaching in various places, he was master of a grammar-school in Boston in 1827–53, and of a girl's school in 1853–8. Among his many school text-books are "Aids to Eng. Composition," 1846; "Natural Philosophy," 1837; and with J. M. Watson, "National Series of Readers and Spellers;" also author of Hist. of the Grammar-School in E. Parish, Roxbury, 1826; "Tribute to the Life and Character of Jonas Chickering," 12mo, 1854.

Parker, SAMUEL, D.D., Prot.-Episcopal bishop of the eastern diocese (consec. 14 Sept. 1804), b. Portsmouth, N.H., Aug. 28, 1744; d. Dec. 6, 1804. H.U. 1764. Son of Wm. (1703–81), judge of the Superior Court of N.H. 1771–6. He was 9 years a teacher; was in 1773 assist. rector of Trinity Church, Boston; was ord. by the bishop of London in Feb. 1774; and 2 Nov. following he entered upon the discharge of his duties. During the Revol. many of the Epis. clergy withdrew to Nova Scotia; but Mr. Parker retained his post. In 1779 he was elected rector of the parish, an office which he held until his death. His son REV. BENJ. CLARK CUTLER (H.U. 1822, b. Boston, June 6, 1796, d. N.Y. City, Jan. 28, 1859; ord. priest, May 17, 1826) preached in various places, and finally took charge of the "Floating Chapel for Seamen" in New York, where he labored 15 years with ability and fidelity.

Parker, REV. SAMUEL, clergyman and author, b. Ashfield, N.H., Apr. 23, 1779; d. Ithaca, N.Y., Mar. 24, 1866. Dartm. Coll. 1806; And. Sem. 1810. He was a missionary in Western N.Y. until ord. minister of Danby in 1812; dism. 1827; settled at Apulia, N.Y., 1830–2; one year pastor at Middlefield, Ms.; and afterward resided at Ithaca. He pub. "Exploring Tour beyond the Rocky Mountains in 1835–7," made under the direction of the A.B.C.F.M. He claimed to be the first to suggest the possibility of a railroad through the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific. — Alumni D.C.

Parker, THEODORE, Unitarian clergyman and author, b. Lexington, Ms., Aug. 24, 1810; d. Florence, Italy, May 10, 1860. M.A. of H.U. 1840. His grandfather, Capt. John, commanded the company of minute-men at Lexington who were fired upon by the British troops, Apr. 19, 1775. Theodore inherited from his parents an earnest and thoughtful mind. At 10 he began to study Latin; at 11 Greek; and metaphysics — the pursuit of his life — at 12. His memory was so retentive, that he could repeat whole volumes of poetry. Before the age of 10 he knew all the shrubs and trees of Ms. He studied at Lexington Acad. in 1827; taught school in the winter of 1827–8; entered Harv. Coll. in 1830, but did not graduate; taught school in Boston and Watertown; in 1834–7 studied divinity at Cambridge; was settled over the Unitarian Society at West Roxbury in June, 1837. In May, 1841, in his sermon at the ordination of Rev. C. C. Shackford of South Boston, he first uttered those sentiments which led to the theol. controversies that marked the active years of his life, prominent among which was the assumption of the humanity and natural inspiration of Christ. In the autumn of 1841 he delivered in Boston 5 lectures, which formed a vol. entitled "A Discourse of Matters pertaining to Religion," 1842. In Sept. 1843 he visited Europe. Was invited to preach in Boston, Feb 16, 1845; and Feb. 16, 1846, became minister of the 28th Cong. Society in Boston, which, in

Nov. 1852, occupied for the first time the great Music Hall, which was crowded every Sunday. Strangers came from every part of the country, attracted by his fame. Jan. 1859, an attack of bleeding at the lungs terminated his public services. He sailed for Santa Cruz, Feb. 3; whence, in May, he sent a letter to his parish, entitled "Theodore Parker's Experience as a Minister." From that island he sailed to Europe, spent some time in Switzerland, and went to Rome, where he passed the winter of 1859. Setting out thence in April, 1860, he with difficulty reached Florence, where he died. He vigorously opposed the Mexican war, and was one of the earliest advocates of temperance and antislavery, writing and speaking much, for the latter cause especially. After the passage of the fugitive-slave law in 1850, he became widely known as its uncompromising opponent. His sympathy was so marked at the rendition of Anthony Burns, in Jan. 1854, as to cause his indictment in the U.S. Court. The indictment was quashed; but Mr. Parker had prepared an elaborate defence, which was printed. He bequeathed his valuable library of 13,000 volumes to the Public Library of Boston. He pub. in 1852 "Sermons on Theism, Atheism, and Popular Theology;" "Miscellaneous Writings," 12mo, 1843; "Occasional Sermons and Speeches," 2 vols. 12mo, 1852; "Additional Speeches and Addresses," 2 vols. 12mo, 1855; "Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping," 1855. In addition to these he wrote for the Dial, Boston Quarterly Review, Christian Register, Christian Examiner; edited the Ms. Quarterly from 1847 to 1850, and was also actively engaged as a lecturer. His "Life and Correspondence," by John Weiss, was pub. N.Y., 2 vols. 8vo, 1864. A complete edition of his works, edited by Frances Power Cobbe, was pub. Lond. 12 vols. 1863–5. He was plain, outspoken, and uncompromising in the utterance of his convictions, but in the intercourse of private life exhibited an almost feminine gentleness and affectionateness. He was remarkable for the extraordinary extent and precision of his knowledge.

Parker, Thomas, first minister of Newbury, Ms., from 1635 to his d. Apr. 24, 1677, b. June 8, 1595. He studied some time at Oxford, and in Ireland under Dr. Usher, receiving his degree of M.A. while at Leyden in 1617. He taught and preached in Newbury, Eng.; came to N.E. in May, 1634; was co-pastor with Mr. Ward of Ipswich about a year; and then began the settlement of Newbury, Ms. A bitter controversy on church govt., lasting for years, unhappily divided his church. He was eminent for learning and piety. He pub. a Letter to a member of the Westminster Assembly on Church Govt., 1644; and "The Prophecies of Daniel Expounded," 4to, 1646; "Methodus Gratiæ Divinæ," 1657; and "Theses de Traductione Peccatoris ad Vitam," with some works of Dr. Ames.

Parkman, Ebenezer, first minister of Westborough, Ms., from Oct. 28, 1724, to his d. Dec. 9, 1782; b. Boston, Sept. 5, 1703. H.U. 1721. A short account of Westborough by him is in "Ms. Hist. Colls." He pub. "Reformers and Intercessors," 1752; "Convention Sermon," 1761.

Parkman, Francis, D.D. (H.U. 1834), a Unitarian minister, b. Boston, June 4, 1788; d. there Nov. 12, 1852. H.U. 1807. He studied theology under Dr. William E. Channing and at the U. of Edinburgh. Ord. Dec. 8, 1813; from 1813 to 1849 he was pastor of the New North Church in Boston. He pub. "The Offering of Sympathy," 1829, and some occasional sermons and addresses. The Parkman professorship of pulpit eloquence and pastoral care in the Camb. Theol. School was founded by his munificence; and he took an active part in nearly all the most important charitable institutions of his native city.

Parkman, Francis, author, b. Boston, Sept. 16, 1823. H.U. 1844. Son of Rev. Francis. He visited Europe in 1844; and in 1846 made a journey across the prairies, and explored the Rocky Mountains. An account of this expedition was given in a series of articles in the Knickerbocker Mag., collected and pub. under the title of "The California and Oregon Trail," N.Y. 1849. He has also pub. a "History of the Conspiracy of Pontiac," Boston, 1851; "Vassal Morton," a novel; "France and England in N. Amer.," 2 vols. 1865–7; "Discovery of the Great West," 1869. Mr. Parkman labors under the serious disadvantage of an affection of the eyes, which often renders him wholly unable to read or write.

Parris, Albion Keith, gov. of Me. in 1821–6; b. Auburn, Me., Jan. 19, 1788; d. Portland, Me., Feb. 11, 1857. Dartm. Coll. 1806. 1823–8; in 1828–36 a judge of the Supreme Court of Me.; and in 1836–50 was a comptroller of the U.S. treasury. He retired to Portland in 1850, and was mayor of the city in 1852.

Parris, SAMUEL, first minister of Danvers, Ms., from Nov. 19, 1689, to June, 1696, b. London, 1653; d. Sudbury, Ms., 27 Feb. 1720. He studied at H.U., but did not grad. At first a merchant in Boston, afterward a minister. The Salem witchcraft commenced in his family in 1692. His dau., and his niece Abigail Williams, aged 11, accused Tituba (a South-Amer. slave), living as a servant in the family, of bewitching them. Mr. Parris beat her, and compelled her to confess herself a witch. John, Tituba's husband, for his own safety turned accuser of others. 19 were hung, and Gyles Cory pressed to death. The delusion lasted 16 months. As Mr. Parris had been a zealous prosecutor, his church in Apr. 1693 brought charges against him. He acknowledged his error, and was dismissed. After preaching two or three years at Stow, he removed to Concord, and preached 6 months in Dunstable in 1711. — See Life of Parris by S. P. Fowler (read to Essex Inst.), 8vo, 1857.

Parton, Sara Payson ("Fanny Fern"), b. Portland, Me., July 7, 1811. Sister of N. P. Willis. Her father Nathaniel removed with his family to Boston when she was 6 years old. She was educated in a school at Hartford taught by Catharine and Harriet Beecher; and in 1834 m. Charles Eldridge of Boston, upon whose death in 1846 she was thrown upon her own resources to provide for herself and two children. She was subsequently m. to Mr. Farrington, a merchant of Boston; but their union was of brief duration. Not succeeding in obtaining employment in teaching or in other vocations, she in 1851 assumed the pen for a livelihood. Her first essay proved successful, and was followed by others, which were widely copied, until the pseudonyme of "Fanny Fern" was familiar in all parts of the U.S. These pieces were pub. in 1853 under the title of "Fern-Leaves," of which 70,000 copies were sold; and were followed by her "Little Ferns," 1853; "Fern-Leaves," 2d series, 1854; "Ruth Hall," "Rose Clark," "Fresh Leaves," 1857; "Folly as it Flies," 12mo, 1868; and the "Play-day Book," — some of which have been repub. in Eng. and elsewhere. The "Life and Beauties of Fanny Fern" was pub. Lond. 1855. Her chief employment from 1854–72 was writing for the N.Y. Ledger. Soon after commencing her literary career, she went to New York; and was m. to James Parton, the author, in Jan. 1856; d. Oct. 10, 1872.

Partridge, Alden, milit. instructor, b. Norwich, Vt., 1785; d. there 16 Jan. 1854. West Point, 1806; Dartm. Coll. 1812. Assist. prof. of math. W. P. Nov. 1806; prof. of math. Established in 1820, in Norwich, Vt., a milit. acad., incorp. in 1834 as the Norw. U., of which he was pres.; and founded milit. schools in Portsmouth, Va. (1840), Reading, Pa. (1850), and in Pembroke, N.H. He lectured on milit. affairs in the large cities; was a member of the Vt. legisl. in 1833, '34, and '39; and was surv.-gen. of Vt. in 1832. Author of "An Excursion," 1822; Letters on Education, and on National Defence; Journal of a Tour of Cadets, &c., 8vo, 1827.

Partridge, George, Revol. patriot, b. Duxbury, Ms., Feb. 8, 1740; d. there July 7, 1828. H. U. 1762. He studied divinity, but never preached; and was some years a teacher at Kingston, Ms. He was a delegate to the Prov. Congress 1774–5, in which he was very active; was a State representative 1775–9; a delegate to the Cont. Congress 1779–82 and 1783–5; M.C. 1789–91; and sheriff of Plymouth Co. 1780 and several years following. He bequeathed a large part of his estate for religious and educational uses.

Partridge, Oliver, member of the first Colonial Congress in 1765, b. Hatfield, Ms., 13 June, 1712; d. there July 21, 1792. Y. C 1730. His ancestor Wm., an early settler on the Ct. River, came from Berwick-on-Tweed, and died in Hadley.

Pascalis, Felix A. Ouvière, M.D., physician, b. France ab. 1750; d. New York, July 27, 1833. After completing his medical education, he established himself in practice in St. Domingo. After the insurrection of the blacks there, in 1793, he resided in Phila., and subsequently, for near 30 years, in New York. His observations on the yellow-fever at Cadiz in 1805 produced in him a conviction that the disease was not contagious: this result was made known to the public in the Medical Repository, a journal which he edited jointly with Drs. Mitchell and Ackerly, and to which he was a frequent contrib. In 1798 he pub. an Account of the Contagious and Epidemic Yellow-Fever in Phila. in 1797; in 1812 an essay on syphilitic diseases; and in 1829 "Instructions for Silk-worm Nurseries, and Culture of the Mulberry-Tree."

Paschall, Nathaniel, editor, b. Knoxville, Tenn., April 4, 1802; d. St. Louis, Dec. 12, 1866. He went to St. Louis an orphan in 1814, and apprenticed himself to Joseph Charless of the Mo. Gazette; in 1827 he started with Edward Charless, the son of his patron, the Missouri Republican, of which, with the exception of 1843, when clerk of St. Louis County, he was editor and half-owner till he died. He was master of a terse and vigorous style. His paper, while conspicuous for its ability, advocated slavery, and opposed the Republican party.

Passaconaway (Papisseconewa), the Merrimack sachem, and the great sagamore of Pamunkog, or Pennacook; d. 1663–9 at a very great age. He held control over the tribes of Southern N.H. and a portion of Ms., and was at the head of a powerful confederacy when the whites first settled the country. May 17, 1629, he conveyed to John Wheelwright and his associates at Squamscut (now Exeter) the tract of land extending from the Piscataqua to the Merrimack westward, and from the line of Ms. 30 miles north. In 1648 he invited the Indian apostle Eliot to take up his abode near his tribe, so that they might be taught Christianity, at the same time avowing his belief in God. He was sagacious and cunning, and had a great reputation as a powwow, or sorcerer. At a great dance and feast in 1660 he made his farewell speech to his people, and exhorted them to live in peace with the English, as he had tried his arts as a powwow against them in vain. — C. E. Potter in Farmer's Monthly Visitor, Feb. 1852.

Passmore, Rev. Joseph C., D.D., b. Lancaster, Pa., 1818; d. Racine, Wis., 12 Aug. 1866. Ord. deacon P. E. Ch. 1848; priest 1849. Pelby, ROSALIE (FRENCH), actress, b. Kinderhook, N.Y., Mar. 17, 1793; d. on the passage from San Francisco to N.Y. June, 1855. From her father, the capt. of a North-River sloop, she inherited much personal beauty. Her education was limited; but she had a strong mind, and great perceptive faculties. She was early m. to an English agent, a Mr Brown, by whom she had one child, — the late Mrs. Anderson, an actress of great merit. Left a widow a few years after, she m. in Baltimore Mr. Wm. Pelby, the well-known tragedian and manager; thence she came to Boston, and was wrecked on her passage in the great Sept. gale of 1815. She made her first appearance at the Federal-st. Theatre, Boston, as a chorus-singer, in 1813, but rapidly rose to a high position as an actress, and in some characters had no superior, and in others no equal, on the Amer. stage. In 1847, with Mrs. Anderson, she started for Eng. on a professional tour, but was wrecked on the passage, and returned to Boston. Apr. 1, 1853, she received a farewell benefit at the National Theatre, and went to California, where, after acting a while, she opened an exhibition of wax statuary, in the manuf. of which she had great taste, and which she had also exhibited in Boston. She was an ornament to her profession; and her charities were numerous. Her husband (b. Boston, Mar. 16, 1793), after being many years proprietor and manager of the National Theatre, Boston, d. May 28, 1850. Her dau. Julia Pelby, also an actress, m. James Pearson of San Francisco.

He had few educational advantages, but at 21 was adm. to practise law. Entering the h. of burgesses in 1752, he became a leading member, and at the period of the Revol. was speaker; in 1764 he was one of the com. to memorialize the king; member of the com. of corresp. in 1773; presiding magistrate and county lieut. of Caroline Co. in 1774; member of Cong. in 1774–5; pres. of the Va. convs. of Dec. 1775, and of May, 1776; and drew up the resolutions instructing the delegates of Va. to propose in Cong. a decl. of indep. As the representative of the conservatives, he was the opponent of Patrick Henry, the great popular leader. He was the head of the com. of safety during the early part of the war, the body which controlled the military and naval operations as well as the foreign corresp. of Va. On the organization of the State, he was chosen speaker of the house, and app., with Wythe and Jefferson, to revise the col. laws. He was crippled for life by a fall from his horse in March, 1777. Was again elected speaker and pres. of the Chancery Court; and in 1779 pres. of the Court of Appeals. In 1788 he presided over the conv. which adopted the U.S. Constitution. His masterly advocacy of this great national compact gained for him this high encomium from Jefferson: "Taken all in all, he was the ablest man in debate I ever met with." App. judge of the U.S. Dist. Court of Va. in 1789, but declined; in 1798, when a rupture with France was imminent, he pub. a pamphlet protesting against a war with a sister republic.

He then pub. "A Brief Account of the Province of Pa.," proposing the easy purchase of lands, and good terms to settlers thereon. Having established a govt. allowing perfect liberty of conscience, Penn visited his province, arriving in Delaware Bay 27 Oct. 1682. Ab. the end of Nov. was held the famous treaty with the Indians; and he founded Phila., the "city of brotherly love." Committing the govt. to a provis. council, he returned to Eng. in Aug. 1684. Through his influence with James II., who had been his father's firm friend, he obtained in 1686 the liberation of over 1,200 imprisoned Quakers, and aided in procuring in 1687 the "Toleration Act." After the accession of William III., in 1688, Penn, having incurred suspicion on account of his intimacy with James, was tried for treason, but was honorably acquitted. He made in 1699–1701 a second visit to America. He was committed to the Fleet Prison for debt in 1703, where he remained a long time, but was at length released by the intervention of friends. Worn out, at length, with the incessant labors and cares of a life spent almost wholly in the service of others, he died of paralysis. The charge of Macaulay, that Penn dishonorably implicated himself in his support of James II., was replied to by Hepworth Dixon in his Biography of Penn in 1851. — See Lives of Penn by S. Janney, 1852; Clarkson, 1813; J. Massillac, 1791; Jacob Post, 1850; and Weems, 1829; Corresp. between W. Penn and James Logan, with Notes by Mrs. Deborah Logan, ed. by Armstrong, 8vo.

Perkins, ELISHA, physician, b. Norwich, Jan. 16, 1741; d. New York, Sept. 6, 1799. Educated for the profession by his father Dr. Joseph in Plainfield, and possessed remarkable endowments of body and mind. He made great sacrifices in establishing and supporting an acad. at Plainfield, and other useful improvements there. Ab. 1796 he invented the "Metallic Tractors." These were brass and iron pins, applied first to the cure of gout, rheumatism, and analogous disorders, and attracted great attention for a time, but soon fell into disuse, being attacked as an imposture by men of science. He invented an antiseptic medicine, and, to test its efficacy against yellow-fever, went to New York during its prevalence in 1799, and fell a victim to that disease.

Perkins, GEORGE ROBERTS, LL.D. (Ham. Coll. 1852), mathematician and astronomer, b. Otsego Co., N.Y., May 3, 1812. Principally self-educated. He taught mathematics at the "Liberal Institute," Clinton, N.Y., in 1831–8; became principal of the Utica Acad.; prof. of math. in the State Normal School in 1844–8, and principal in 1848–52. He contrib. to many scientific periodicals; d. Aug. 22, '76.

Perkins, JACOB, inventor, b. Newburyport, Ms., July 9, 1766; d. London, July 30, 1849. At the age of 15 he carried on the business of a goldsmith in his native town, also inventing a method of plating shoe-buckles, then universally worn; at 21 he made dies for the mint; at 24 he invented the machine for cutting and heading nails at one operation, and invented steel plates for bank-notes which it was supposed could not be counterfeited. He resided some time in Boston and New York; went to Phila. in 1815, and in 1818 to Eng., where he received a generous patronage, and was employed in perfecting engines and machines to be worked by steam-power, and carried on a large manuf. in Lond. for many years. He also originated the process of transferring engravings from one steel plate to another; invented the steam-gun; the bathometer, for compressing water; and the pleometer, to mark the speed with which a vessel moves. Many of his inventions were rewarded by the gold and silver medals of the Society of Arts, London.

Peters, or Peter, Hugh, clergyman and politician, b. Fowey, Cornwall, Eng., 1599; executed in Lond. Oct. 16, 1660. Trin. Coll., Camb., 1622. Took holy orders, and preached successfully for some time at St. Sepulchre's, Lond., but, after imprisonment for nonconformity, removed to Rotterdam. He preached to an independent cong. there several years; then came to N.E., arriving in Oct. 1635; became pastor, Dec. 21, 1636, of the church in Salem, as successor of Roger Williams, whose doctrines he disclaimed, and whose adherents he excommunicated. He was also active in civil and mercantile affairs, suggesting coasting and foreign voyages and the plan of the fisheries. In Mar. 1638 he was app. by the Gen. Court to assist in collecting and revising the colonial laws; Aug. 3, 1641, he sailed to Eng. to procure an alteration in the laws of excise and trade; had several interviews with Charles I.; and probably influenced the passage of an act of parliament modifying them in 1643. He became a preacher in the parliamentary army, which he accomp. to Ireland in 1649, holding, it is said, a colonel's commission. In 1651 he was app. by parliament one of the commiss. to amend the laws; and in 1654 was made one of the "tryers" of ministers; in 1658 he preached for some time to the Eng. garrison in Dunkirk. After the restoration, Peters was committed to the Tower, and indicted for high treason, as having been concerned in the death of the king. During his imprisonment he wrote several letters of advice to his daughter, subsequently (1717) pub. under the title of "A Dying Father's Last Legacy to an Only Child." His private character has been the subject of much discussion both in Eng. and Amer. He was charged by his enemies with gross immorality, and the most bitter epithets were applied to him by Bishops Burnet, Kenneth, and others; but of late years he has been estimated more favorably. Author of "Good Work for a Good Magistrate," 1651 (in which he recommends burning the historical records in the Tower); and some sermons and political tracts.

Peters, Hugh, poet, b. Hebron, Ct., Jan. 30, 1807; d. Cincinnati, O., June 9, 1831. Y.C. 1826. Son of Judge John T. Adm. to the bar in 1828, he began practice at Cincin. Among his contribs. to the N. E. Weekly Review were a series of Yankee lyrics of much merit. — See Everest's Poets of Ct., and Coggeshall's Poets and Poetry of the West.

Peters, John Charles, M.D., physician, b. New York, July 6, 1819. He commenced the study of homœopathy in 1837, and, visiting Europe in 1842, continued it in the schools of Leipsic, Berlin, and Vienna. Commencing practice in New York as a homœopathist, he has endeavored to incorporate into that system such improvements in medical practice as auscultation and percussion, microscopy, the use of the ophthalmoscope, pathological anatomy and chemistry, &c. Peters, SAMUEL ANDREW, D.D., LL.D., clergyman and author, b. Hebron, Ct., Dec. 12, 1735; d. N.Y. Apr. 19, 1826. Y.C. 1757. He travelled in Europe in 1758–9. Became a Pr.-Epis. clergyman, and in 1762 took charge of the churches of Hebron and Hartford. His imprudence and loyalty involved him in constant trouble; and probably no clergyman of his time was more obnoxious. Being a Tory, he was forced in 1774 to flee to Eng., where he pub. in 1781 "A General History of Connecticut," which has been called the "most unscrupulous and malicious of lying narratives." Its narrations are independent of time, place, and probability. In 1794 he was chosen bishop of Vt., but was never consec. In 1805 he returned to Amer., and pub. in N.Y. a "History of Rev. Hugh Peters," his great-uncle, in 1807, and also a brief history of Hebron. In 1817 he made a journey to the Falls of St. Anthony, claiming a large tract of land in that region. He afterward lived in N.Y. City in poverty and obscurity, though he obtained a pension and a grant for property confiscated by the patriots. He is the "Parson Peter" of Trumbull's "M'Fingal."

Petersen, JOHN ERIC CHRISTIAN, marine painter, b. Copenhagen, Denmark, 3 April, 1839. Studied law in the U. of Copenhagen in 1859, and afterward learned the art of painting at the Roy. Acad. of Copenhagen, and with Malbye and Dahl; served as an officer of Danish inf. in the war with Prussia and Austria in 1864; arrived in the U.S. 29 July, 1865, and has a studio in Boston. Among his best pictures are "The Start of the Ocean Race of 1866 from Sandy Hook," "Phantom Ship," "Rescue," "Egg Rock," "Making Sail after the Gale," "Capture of the Pirate," and the yacht "Dreadnaught." Petigru, JAMES LOUIS, LL.D. (H.U. 1837), lawyer, b. Abbeville Dist., S.C., 1789; d. Charleston, Mar. 9, 1863. S.C. Coll. 1809. He was of mixed Irish and Huguenot descent. Adm. to the bar, he attained distinc. as a country lawyer, and subsequently at the Charleston bar; atty.-gen. of S.C. 1822–30. During the nullification troubles of 1830–2 he vigorously and eloquently opposed the doctrine of the State veto, and became a leader in the Union and State-rights party, upon whose defeat, he, from being one of the most popular men in the State, became an object of dislike. His virtues, and his unquestioned talent and ability as an advocate, nevertheless secured him the respect of the community in which he lived; and he held his prominence at the bar with scarcely a rival. He was subsequently for a brief period U.S. dist.-atty., which subjected him further to public odium. He also served in the State legisl., and in 1861 was a commiss. for codifying the laws and statutes of S.C. He opposed almost singly the secession movement in S.C. in 1860, though too old to take an active part in political controversies, remaining unshaken in his convictions to the hour of his death. Pres. S. C. Hist. Soc. Author of "Semi-Centenn. Oration," S. C. Coll., 1855; "Address bef. the S. C. Hist. Soc.," 1858. — See Biog. Sketch by W. J. Grayson, 12mo, 1866.

Petion, ANNE ALEXANDER SABES, first pres. of the repub. of Hayti, b. Port au Prince, Apr. 2, 1770; d. 29 Mar. 1818. Son of a rich colonist named Sabes by a free mulatto woman. Liberally educated at the military school of Paris. When the Revol. broke out at St. Domingo, he was one of the first who took arms; was soon made an officer of art.; and obtained the rank of adj.-gen. He joined Rigaud, a man of color like himself, in opposing the projects of Toussaint L'Ouverture; and, being unsuccessful, embarked for France, but returned with Gen. Leclerc, under whom Petion held a colonel's commission. The violent measures adopted by Leclerc and his successor Rochambeau induced Petion to quit the French service, and, forming a union with Dessalines, to declare war against the French, whom they at length expelled. Assisted by the English, they succeeded in establishing the indep. of Hayti in 1804. Petion obtained the govt. of the western dist. of which Port au Prince was the capital, Dessalines becoming chief of the republic. Christophe, his successor, behaving in a tyrannical manner, was obliged to submit to a partition of his domains. All ambuscade, and shooting down all who ventured outside of the places of protection. Philip formed an alliance with the powerful Narragansetts; but an expedition under Winslow in Dec. 1675 resulted in the complete subjugation of that tribe. This blow, and the complete destruction of his own tribe, soon left Philip without resources. Deserted by all, he was hunted from spot to spot; and at last, taking refuge at Mount Hope, was there attacked by a party under Capt. Church, and was killed by an Indian while attempting to flee. In this war 13 towns were destroyed; many others suffered severely; and 600 colonists were slain. Philip was brave, crafty, and politic; had great influence over the neighboring tribes; and was implacable in his hatred of the colonists.

Phillips, WENDELL, orator and reformer, b. Boston, Nov. 29, 1811. H.U. 1831; Camb. Law School, 1833. Son of John, first mayor of Boston. Adm. to the Suffolk bar in 1834. The agitation of the slavery question was at this time at its height; and Mr. Phillips joined the abolitionists in 1836, relinquishing professional practice in 1839 from unwillingness to act under his attorney's oath to the Constitution of the U.S. His first memorable speech was made in Faneuil Hall in Dec. 1837, at a meeting "to notice in a suitable manner the murder, in the city of Alton, Ill., of the Rev. Elijah P. Lovejoy, who fell in defence of the freedom of the press." At a moment when the purpose of the meeting seemed likely to be defeated, and its resolutions rejected, by the opposition of Atty.-Gen. Austin, Mr. Phillips, who was among the audience, in an outburst of indignant eloquence at once rebuked Mr. Austin for the sentiments he had uttered, and secured the passage of the resolutions. He was a prominent advocate of the doctrines of the Garrisonian abolitionists, who, believing the Constitution of the U.S. to be an immoral compact between freedom and slavery, refused it support, abstained from voting, and labored for the dissolution of the Union as the best means of freeing the slaves. Mr. Phillips is now identified with the progress of the temperance, labor-reform, and woman's-rights movements. He is a frequent public lecturer, and as an orator ranks among the very foremost America has produced. Pres. of the Amer. Antislavery Soc. from 1865 until its dissolution, 9 April, 1870; candidate of the Labor-reform party for gov. of Ms. in 1870. His Speeches, Lectures, and Letters were pub. He has contrib. largely to the Liberator and to the Antislavery Standard.

Phillips, WILLARD, LL.D., A.A.S., lawyer and author, b. Bridgewater, Ms., Dec. 19, 1784. H.U. 1810; tutor there 1810–15. He procured the means for his own education by teaching. He then began the practice of law in Boston, and at the same time assisted in the editorship of the N.A. Review, to which he was, until 1834, a contrib. In 1825 and '26 he was a member of the State legisl. He gave up practice in 1845; was judge of probate for Suffolk Co. in 1839–47; and was president of the N.E. Mutual Life Insurance Co. in 1843–73; in 1837–41 he was one of the commiss. who reduced the law of crimes and punishments to a systematic code. He pub. in 1812 a pamphlet entitled "An Appeal to the Public Spirit of the Federalists and the Good Sense of the Democrats;" "Treatise on Insurance," 1823, 5th edition, 2 vols. 8vo, 1868; "Treatise on Patents," 1837; "Inventor's Guide," 1837; "A Manual of Political Economy," 1828; "Propositions concerning Protection and Free Trade," 1850. He wrote, among other articles for the "Encyclopædia Americana," one on "Political Economy," and in 1832 pub. a digest of the first 8 vols. of Pickering's "Reports." With Edward Pickering he edited the first Amer. edition of "Collyer on Partnership." In 1812 he was a contrib. to the Gen. Repository and Review, and for some years edited and pub. the Amer. Jurist; d. Cambridge, Ms., Sept. 9, 1873.

Phillips, WILLIAM, a British gen.; d. Petersburg, Va., May 13, 1781. App. capt. of art. May, 1756; brev. lieut.-col. 1760; col. May 25, 1772; and maj.-gen. in June, 1776, in Burgoyne's exped. He served with credit in Germany; was taken prisoner with Burgoyne in Oct. 1777; exchanged in Nov. 1779; and was actively engaged at the South until his death. In the spring of 1781 he was sent from New York with 2,000 men to join Arnold, then at the Chesapeake. After a brief career of devastation in Va., he was carried off by a fever. He was haughty and irritable, and held the Americans in great contempt.

Phillips, WILLIAM, lieut.-gov. of Ms. 1812–23, b. Boston, Apr. 10, 1750; d. May 26, 1827. Son of Wm., a benefactor of Andover Sem., who d. Jan. 15, 1804, a. 82. He engaged in business with his father, and acquired a fortune; was an ardent patriot of the Revol.; was several years a representative after 1800; and at his death bequeathed large sums to Phillips Acad., Andover Theol. Sem., and other institutions. His son JONATHAN, also a philanthropic merchant of Boston, and a member of the Ms. legisl., b. 24 Apr. 1778, d. 29 July, 1860.

Phillips, WILLIAM WIRT, D. D. (Col. Coll. 1826), Presb. clergyman, b. Montgomery Co., N. Y., 23 Sept. 1796; d. N. Y. City, 20 Mar. 1865. Un. Coll. 1815; New Brunswick Theol. Sem. Ord. Apr. 1818 over the Pearl-street Church, New York; transferred in 1826 to the Wall-street Church; afterwards removed to Fifth Avenue, where he officiated till his death. He held many important trusts in his denomination, and was in 1835 moderator of the Gen. Assembly.

Phipps, HENRY, Earl of Mulgrave, a British gen., b. 1755; d. April 7, 1831. Educated at Eton, and intended for the law; he entered the army in 1775; was aide-de-camp to Knyphausen in 1776; served through the American war; was disting. at the siege of Toulon in 1794; rose to the rank of gen. in 1809; and became an earl in 1812.

Phips, SPENCER, lieut.-gov. of Ms., b. Rowley, Ms., June 6, 1685; d. April 4, 1757. H.U. 1703. Son of Dr. David Bennet of Rowley; and on being adopted by his uncle, Sir Wm. Phips, took by statute the latter name. He was a councillor in 1722; was 9 times re-elected; was lieut.-gov. in 1731–57, and administered the govt. from Sept. 1749 to 1753, and in 1756–7. His son DAVID (H. U. 1741) d. Bath, Eng., in 1811, a. 87. A prominent loyalist of Boston; went to Halifax in 1776.

Phips, or Phipps, Sir William, gov. of Ms., b. Woolwich, Me., Feb. 2, 1651; d. London, Feb. 18, 1695. He was one of 26 children; was at first a shepherd; at the age of 18 bound himself to a ship-carpenter, and learned to read and write. In 1684 he went to Eng. to procure means to recover the treasure from a Spanish vessel wrecked near the Bahamas. His first search, for which a national vessel was furnished him, was unsuccessful; in a second attempt in 1687, at the cost of the Duke of Albemarle, he recovered from the wreck treasure to the amount of £300,000, of which £16,000 was given him as his share. He was also knighted, and app. high sheriff of New Eng. In 1690 he com. the fleet which captured Port Royal, also a much larger one sent against Quebec without success. He arrived in Boston in Nov., and was made a magistrate of the colony, but soon revisited England to induce the govt. to send another expedition to Canada. Through the influence of Increase Mather, the agent of Ms. in Eng., he was app. gov. of the province, and arrived in Boston, May 14, 1692; in Aug. he sailed with ab. 450 men to Pemaquid, where he built a fort. Summoned in 1694 to Eng. to answer complaints which had been brought against him, he died there very suddenly. He was a lover of his country, a man of uncommon enterprise and industry, and of an excellent disposition; but the violence of his temper weakened his influence. He is much eulogized by Cotton Mather, his pastor, with whom he co-operated in the witchcraft delusion. — See Life by Bowen in Sparks's Am. Biog.

Physick, Philip Syng, M.D. (Edinburgh, 1792), an eminent physician and surgeon, b. Phila. July 7, 1768; d. there Dec. 15, 1837. U. of Pa. 1785. His father, an Englishman, had charge of the estates of the Penn family. He received his early education at the Friends' Acad.; studied medicine; went to Europe in Nov. 1788; became the private pupil of John Hunter, and in 1790 was adm. to St. George's Hospital as house-surgeon. On leaving it, he received his diploma from the Roy. Coll. of Surgeons in Lond.; was invited by Dr. Hunter to assist him in his professional business, and remained with him a year. After a year's attendance on the lectures of the university, and visiting the Royal Infirmary at Edinb., Dr. Physic returned to Phila.; commenced the practice of medicine; and in 1793, on the appearance of the epidemic, was app. physician to the Yellow-fever Hospital at Bush Hill; in 1794 one of the surgeons of the Pa. Hospital; on the re-appearance of the yellow-fever was again resident physician at the Bush-hill Hospital; and in 1801–16 was surgeon-extr. to the Phila. Almshouse Infirmary; in 1805 he was app. prof. of surgery in the U. of Pa.; in 1819–31 he filled the chair of anatomy; in 1821 was app. consulting surgeon to the Inst. for the Blind; in 1824 was elected pres. of the Phila. Med. Soc.; in 1825 became a member of the Roy. Acad. of Med. in France; and in 1836 an hon. fellow of the Roy. Med. and Chirurgical Soc. of Lond. As a practical surgeon, Dr. P. had no rival in the U.S.; and he was exceedingly popular as a lecturer. Author of valuable communications to the medical journals. — See Memoir by John Bell in Gross's Med. Biog.

Piatt, John James, poet, b. Milton, Ind., 1 Mar. 1835. Nephew of Donn Piatt, writer and politician, and of Abram Sanders Piatt, political and poetical writer. He learned the printing-business, and attended the Columbus High school and Kenyon Coll. He became known by his poetical contribs. to the Louisville Journal in 1858; became a contrib. to the Atlantic Monthly in 1859; and in 1860, in conjunction with W. D. Howells, pub. a vol. of "Poems of Two Friends." — See Poets and Poetry of the West.

Pichon, Thomas (alias Thomas Signis Tyrrell), b. France; d. Jersey, 1782. He was brought up a medical student at Marseilles, and was insp. of hospitals in Bohemia in 1743; sec. to Count Raymond, the French gov. of Cape Breton, 1751–3; and was afterward commiss. of stores at Fort Beausejour until its capture in 1755. All the while he held these posts, he was furnishing information to the British officers, from whom he received money, and articles of dress. He was in Lond. from 1758 till his death. He pub. anonymously a work on Cape Breton and St. John Island, containing accurate descriptions of the Indians and other valuable information, Lond. 1760, and Paris 1761. He claimed the name of Tyrrell as that of his mother's family.

Pickens, Andrew, brig.-gen. Revol. army, b. Paxton, Bucks Co., Pa., 19 Sept. 1739; d. Pendleton Dist., S.C., 17 Aug. 1817. His parents, who were of Huguenot descent, removed in 1752 to the Waxhaw Settlement, S.C. He was a vol. in Col. Grant's exped. against the Cherokees in Apr. 1761, after which he removed to the Long Cane Settlement. At the outset of the Revol. he was made a capt. of militia, but rose rapidly, through courage, skill, and zeal, to the rank of brig.-gen. In the darkest time, when the South was overrun by the enemy, and suffered from the Tories all the horrors of civil war, he, with Marion and Sumter, kept alive the spirit of resistance. In Feb. 1779, with 400 men, he defeated Col. Boyd with 700 Tories at Kettle Creek; had his horse killed under him while covering the retreat at the battle of Stono, 20 June, 1779; and in that year inflicted a severe defeat on the Cherokees at Tomassee; at the battle of the Cowpens, 17 Jan. 1781, he com. the militia, whom he rallied and brought a second time into action after they had been broken and compelled to retreat, for which service Congress voted him a sword; in June he captured Augusta, Ga.; and at the battle of Eutaw, where he com. the Carolina militia, was struck by a bullet, which, but for striking the buckle of his sword-belt, would have inflicted a mortal wound. By a successful exped. against the Cherokees in 1782, he obtained a large cession of territory now embraced in the State of Ga. Member of the S.C. legisl. from the close of the war to 1794; M.C. 1793–5, member of the State Const. Conv.; made maj.-gen. of militia in 1795; and again in the legisl. until 1801 and in 1812. Commiss. in many treaties with the Southern Indians; by that of Hopewell he obtained from the Cherokees the portion of the State of S.C. now called Pendleton and Greenville. He soon after settled at Hopewell, on Keowee River, where the treaty was held. In 1765 he married Rebecca Calhoun, aunt of John C. He was remarkable for simplicity, decision, and prudence, and for the scrupulous performance of duty. His son ANDREW, gov. of S.C. 1816–18, an able lawyer, d. Pontotock, Mpi., 1 July, 1838.

Pickens, FRANCIS W., statesman, b. Togadoo, St. Paul's Parish, S.C., Apr. 7, 1807; d. Edgefield, S.C., Jan. 25, 1869. Son of Gov. Andrew. Educated at S.C. Coll. Was in 1829 adm to the bar, and began practice in Edgefield Dist. During the nullification excitement in 1832, he disting. himself in the legisl. as a debater; was prominent on the committees on the judiciary and on foreign relations; made a report in 1833, as chairman of a sub-com., to the effect that Congress, as the agent and mere creature of the States severally, had no claim to allegiance, and could exercise no sovereignty. M.C. 1835–45. In 1836 he made an elaborate speech, denying the right of Congress to abolish slavery in the Dist. of Col.; in 1844 he was elected to the S.C. senate. He voted with the majority against the "Bluffton movement," a secession demonstration then in progress in the State, advocated by Gov. Hammond and other prominent men; was a member of the Nashville Southern Conv. in 1850–1; presided over the State conv. called to elect delegates to the gen. Democ. conv. in 1854; was a delegate to that conv. in 1856 at Cincinnati; was minister to Russia in 1858–60; and, when S.C. declared its secession from the Union, was chosen its gov. He immediately demanded of Maj. Anderson the surrender of Fort Sumter, and while in office did all in his power in aid of the Rebellion. He was succeeded by Bonham in 1862. He was a planter of great wealth, gave much attention to scientific agriculture, and won much repute in the Southern States as an orator before colleges and literary societies.

Pickens, ISRAEL, gov. of Ala. 1821–5, b. Cabarrus Co., N.C.; d. near Matanzas, April 23, 1827. He served one year in the N.C. legisl.; was M.C. in 1811–17; was app. register of the land-office of Mpi. Terr. in 1817; afterward removed to Ala.; and was U.S. senator in 1826.

Pickering, CHARLES, M.D. (H.U. 1826), naturalist, grandson of Col. Timothy, b. Susquehanna Co., Pa., Nov. 10, 1805. After practising medicine 11 years in Phila., he was attached as naturalist to Wilkes's exploring exped. in 1838–42; then went to India and Eastern Africa, and pub. the results of his researches into the characteristics of their various tribes, in his "Races of Man and their Geographical Distribution," 4to, 1848; and "Geographical Distribution of Animals and Man," 1854. Author, also, of a work on the "Geographical Distribution of Plants," pub. 1861. In 1858 he communicated to the Amer. Oriental Soc. an essay on the Invention of the Art of Writing; and, before the Boston Nat. Hist. Soc., notes on the Stinging Power of the Physalia; d. Boston, March 17, 1878.

Pickering, CHARLES W., commo. U.S.N., b. N.H. Midshipm. May 22, 1822; lieut. Dec. 8, 1838; com. Sept. 14, 1855; capt. July 15, 1862; commo. (retired list) Feb. 1, 1867. In 1822–3 he made his first cruise with his uncle, Capt. R. T. Spencer, in "The Cyane;" executive officer of this vessel in 1854, conveying Lieut. Strain and his exploring-party to Darien, and afterward rescuing, and returning them to N.Y.; com. "The Kearsarge" in the Medit. and W. I. islands 1862–3; com. "The Housatonic," when blown up off Charleston, Feb. 17, 1864, by a sub-marine torpedo; afterward com. steamer "Vanderbilt" at capture of Ft. Fisher. — Hamersly.

Pickering, HENRY, poet, b. Newburgh, N.Y., at the headquarters of Washington, Oct. 8, 1781; d. N.Y. May 8, 1838. Third son of Col. Timothy. Engaged in mercantile pursuits in Salem, and afterward in N.Y. City. An edition of his poems was pub. in Boston in 1831. — Duyckinck.

Pickering, JOHN, LL.D. (Dartm. Coll. 1792), lawyer and jurist, b. Newington, N.H., Sept. 22, 1737; d. Portsmouth, Apr. 11, 1805. H.U. 1761. A prominent member of the conv. which formed the const. of N.H.; in 1787 he was elected a member of the conv. which framed the Const. of the U.S., but declined; he was a judge of the Supreme Court of N.H. in 1790–5, and was at one period chief justice; subsequently he was judge of the Dist. Court of the U.S. for N.H.; but, his reason becoming impaired, he was removed from office by impeachment in 1804.

Pickering, JOHN, LL.D. (Bowd. 1822; H.U. 1835), philologist, and writer on law, b. Salem, Ms., Feb. 17, 1777; d. Boston, May 5, 1846. H. U. 1796. Son of Col. Timothy. He studied law in Phila.; was in 1797 app. sec. of legation to Portugal; was 2 years in Lond. as private sec. to Rufus King, U.S. minister; in 1801 returned to Salem, resumed his legal studies, commenced practice, and remained there until 1827, when he removed to Boston; and was city solicitor from 1829 until his death. His practice was large; but by great industry, and economy in the use of time, his labors in general lit., and philology in particular, made him one of the most profound scholars in the country, and even of the age. He was 3 times representative from Salem, twice a senator from Essex, and once from Suffolk, and was a member of the Executive Council; in 1833 he was a member of the commission for revising and arranging the statutes of Ms. The part entitled "Of the Internal Administration of Govt." was executed by him. He contrib. to the Amer. Jurist; to the Law Reporter of 1841 an article of singular merit, on National Rights and State Rights; to the N. A. Review for Oct. 1840 an article on Conveyancing in Ancient Egypt. Author of "Remarks on Greek Grammars," 1825; "The Vocabulary of Americanisms," 1816; an essay on "The Uniform Orthography of the Indian Language," 1820; "Indian Languages of Amer.;" an article on the Chinese language, on the Cochin-Chinese language; and many productions of an analogous character. His principal work was a Greek and Eng. Lexicon, begun in 1814, but not finished until 1826. He was more or less familiar with 22 different languages, the Egyptian hieroglyphics, the Malay in several dialects, and particularly the Indian languages of Amer. and of the Polynesian Islands. In 1806 he was elected Hancock prof. of Hebrew in H.U., and at a later day was invited to fill the chair of Greek literature. Pres. of the Amer. Acad. of Arts and Sciences, and of the Oriental Soc. of Boston, and a member of many scientific and literary societies in Europe.

Pickering, Octavius, LL.D., legist and naturalist, b. Wyoming, Pa., Sept. 2, 1792; d. Boston, Oct. 29, 1868. H.U. 1810. Adm. to the Suffolk bar, March 6, 1816; opened an office in Boston, and assisted in reporting the proceedings of the State Const. Conv. in 1820; State reporter in 1822–40; and Pickering's "Reports," in 24 vols. 8vo, form a necessary part of every good law-library. He resided in Europe in 1841–8; was many years a member of the Amer. Acad. of Arts and Sciences; and in Dec. 1814 was one of the founders of the organization now known as the Boston Soc. of Nat. Hist. He pub. in 1867 the first vol. of the Life of Col. Timo. Pickering, his father; with W. H. Gardner, "Report of the Trial of Judge James Prescott," 8vo, 1821.

Pickering, Timothy, LL.D. (N. J. Coll. 1798), soldier and statesman, b. Salem, Ms., 17 July, 1745; d. there 29 Jan. 1829. H.U. 1763. Adm. to the bar in 1768, he became the champion and leader of the Whigs of Essex Co.; was on the com. of corresp.; and wrote and delivered the address of the people of Salem to Gov. Gage, in 1774, on the occasion of the Boston Port Bill. He first opposed an armed resistance to the British troops, when, 26 Feb. 1775, he, while a col. of militia, at a drawbridge in Salem, prevented their crossing to seize some military stores. He had been reg. of deeds; and in 1775 was app. a judge of C.C.P. for Essex Co., and sole judge of the Maritime Court for the middle dist. He joined Washington in N. J. in the fall of 1776 with his regt. of 700 men; was made adj.-gen. of the army in May, 1777; was present at the battles of the Brandywine and Germantown; was made by Congress a member of the board of war in Nov.; and succeeded Greene as quartermaster-gen. 5 Aug. 1780. After the war he resided in Phila., and in 1786 was sent by the govt. to adjust a controversy between various claimants to the Wyoming settlement. During this dispute he was waylaid near Wilkesbarre, Pa., by a band of disguised persons, in June, 1788, imprisoned, ill-treated, and his life threatened; 20 days afterward he re-appeared, but was so much changed by his sufferings and hardships, that his children fled affrighted from his presence. (See account of this in his letter in Hazard's "Register of Pa.," vol. vii.) In 1787 he was the deleg. of Luzerne Co. to the Pa. conv. for considering the U.S. Const., and earnestly favored its adoption; U.S. postmaster-gen. 7 Nov. 1791–2 Jan. 1795, and at the same time much employed in negotiations with the Indians; U. S. sec. of war 2 Jan. 1795–10 Dec. 1795; and U.S. sec. of state 10 Dec. 1795–12 May, 1800. He left office poor, and, building a log-hut for his family, settled on some wild lands in Pa. The liberality of friends enabled him to return to Salem at the close of 1801. Made chief justice of the Essex Co. C.C.P. in 1802; U.S. senator in 1803–11 member of the council in 1811; member of the board of war of Ms. during the war of 1812–15; and M.C. 1815–17. He was one of the leaders of the Federal party in the U.S.; member of the Pa. Const. Conv. of 1790; and was active in promoting the cause of education. He pub. "Easy Plan of Discipline for a Militia," Salem, July, 1775; "Letter to Gov. Sullivan on the Embargo;" "Addresses to the People," 1808; "Political Essays," &c., 18mo, 1812; and a severe "Review of the Corresp. between John Adams and W. Cunningham." 1824. He was a talented writer, a brave and patriotic soldier, and a disinterested, able, and energetic public officer. Plain and unassuming in manner, he excelled in conversation. — See Life by his Son Octavius, vol. i. 1867.

Pickett, Col. Albert James, author of a "History of Alabama," 2 vols. Charleston, 1851; b. Anson Co., N.C., Aug. 13, 1810; d. Montgomery, Ala., Oct. 28, 1858. He went with his father to Ala. in 1818; studied law, but never practised; and, after his marriage in 1832, devoted himself to literary pursuits and the care of his plantation.

Pickett, Byron M., a self-taught sculptor, b. Jordan, Onondaga Co., N.Y. Author of several beautiful marble works, among others "Œnone," exhibited at the Nat. Acad. in 1868. Has recently produced a fine statue of S. F. B. Morse.

Pickett, Gen. George E., b. Richmond, Va., 25 Jan. 1825; d. Norfolk, Va., July 30, 1875. W. Pt. 1846. Won in the Mexican war the brevets of 1st lieut. and capt.; capt. 9th Inf. 3 Mar. 1855; res. 25 June, 1861. He joined the Confed. army as col. Sept. 1861; brig.-gen. 14 Feb. 1862; maj.-gen. 10 Oct. 1862; severely wounded at Gaines's Mill 27 June, 1862; com. a div. at Fredericksburg, at Gettysburg, attack on Newbern, N.C.; in Feb. 1864 captured Plymouth, N.C.; surrounded and lost most of his div. at Five Forks; and surrendered with Lee.

vigorously supported the annexation of Texas; was made col. 16th U.S. Inf. after the breaking-out of the Mexican war; app. brig.-gen. 3 Mar. 1847; com. a large re-enforcement for the army of Gen. Scott, and was severely injured by the fall of his horse upon his leg 19 Aug. 1847. He presided over the N.H. Const. Conv. in the winter of 1850–1. At the National Democ. conv., June, 1852, the prominent candidates for the presidency were Cass, Buchanan, and Douglas. After 35 ballots without decisive result, the name of Gen. Pierce was proposed; and he was nominated on the 49th ballot. He was elected for the term of Mar. 4, 1853–7, receiving 254 electoral votes to 42 for his Whig competitor, Gen. Scott. In his inaug. he denounced the agitation of slavery. His administration was signalized by the acquisition from Mexico of Arizona; the organization of the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, by which the Mo. Compromise Act was repealed, and slavery permitted to enter those Territories, — a measure which aroused the indignation of the free States, and created great excitement; and by the troubles in Kansas, caused by the efforts to make of it a slave State, contrary to the wishes of a large majority of its citizens. In Aug. 1854, Mr. Pierce directed the American ambassadors, Buchanan, Mason, and Soulé, to confer on the best means of acquiring Cuba. They met at Ostend, and issued the "Ostend Manifesto," the purport of which was, that, if Spain would not sell Cuba, the Americans would take it by force. He used his official influence to promote the designs of the proslavery party in Kansas. Jan. 24, 1856, he sent a message to Congress, representing the formation of a free-State govt. in Kansas as an act of rebellion. During the Rebellion, he was strongly in sympathy with the secessionists. As a lawyer he acquired an extensive practice. — See his Life by Nathaniel Hawthorne, 1852.

Pigot, SIR ROBERT, a British gen., b. 1720; d. Aug. 1, 1796. Maj. 10th Foot, May 5, 1758; lieut.-col. Feb. 1764; col. 38th Foot, June, 1776; maj.-gen. Aug. 1777; lieut.-gen. Nov. 1782. At the battle of Bunker's Hill he com. the left wing; and to his activity, bravery, and firmness much of the success of that day was owing. So highly did he distinguish himself, that he received as a reward for this service the colonelcy of the 38th Foot. He had a com. in R.I. in Aug. 1778, and superseded Prescott at Newport soon after.

Pike, ALBERT, poet, b. Boston, Dec. 29, 1809. H.U. 1859. Son of a journeyman shoemaker. When he was 4 years old, the family removed to Newburyport. He entered H.U. at the age of 16, but, unable to support himself there, taught at Newburyport and Fairhaven; in the spring of 1831 he went to St. Louis, travelling much of the way on foot; joined an exped. to N. Mexico; and for a year was either a merchant's clerk or a peddler in Santa Fé; in Sept. 1832 he accomp. some trappers, from whom he separated with 4 others; travelled 500 miles on foot, and reached Fort Smith, Ark., "without a rag of clothing, a dollar in money, or knowing a person in the territory." He contrib. poetry to the Ark. Advocate; became a partner in the concern, which he bought out in 1834, and continued to edit the paper until 1836, when he was adm. to the bar, to which he subsequently devoted himself. He pub. "Prose Sketches and Poems," Boston, 12mo, 1834. The "Hymns to the Gods" were composed while he was teaching in Fairhaven. Some of his fugitive poems have appeared in periodicals; and in 1854 a coll. of his poems, entitled "Nugæ," was printed at Phila., but never pub. He was prominent as a State-rights man; served with distinction as a vol. in the Mexican war; and com. a company of Ark. cavalry. He organized a body of Cherokee Indians, whom he led, in the early part of the Rebellion, and took part with them in the battle of Pea Ridge, sharing in the Confed. defeat. He edited the Memphis Appeal in 1867–8; "Reports of the Sup. Ct. of Ark.," 5 vols. 8vo, 1840–5; "The Arkansas Form-Book," 8vo, 1845; "Statutes, &c., of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite," 1859.

to flight, carried one battery by assault, and was moving to the attack of the main works, when the explosion of the British magazine mortally wounded him, speedily causing his death.

Pillmore, JOSEPH, D.D., b. Tadmouth, Yorkshire, Eng., Oct. 31, 1739; d. Phila. July 24, 1825. Came to the U.S. a Meth. preacher in 1769. Ord. Pr.-Ep. Ch. 1785; assist. rector St Paul's 1789–94; of Christ Ch., New York, 1794–1804; of St. Paul's, Phila., from 1804 to his d. Author of "Narrative of Labors in South Wales," 1825. His MS., describing his travels and labors in the different colonies, is in the possession of John Campbell of Phila. (1868). — Allibone.

Pillow, GEN. GIDEON JOHNSON, lawyer and politician, b. Williamson Co., Tenn., June 8, 1806. U. of Nashville, 1827. Second son of Gideon, and grandson of John Pillow, a soldier of the Revol., who in 1783 settled in the present city of Nashville. His five sons were all disting. for activity and intrepidity in conflicts with the Indians. He studied law; practised in Columbia, Tenn., in 1830; and in the course of 10 years ranked with the first lawyers of his State. He contrib. materially in 1844 to the nomination and election of Mr. Polk to the presidency, who, July 13, 1846, made him a brig.-gen. Proceeding at once to Mexico with his brigade of Tenn. vols., after a severe illness at Camargo he joined Scott before Vera Cruz; had a conspicuous share in the operations which resulted in the fall of that important place; and was one of the commiss. to negotiate terms of capitulation. At Cerro Gordo he led the attack on the enemy's right, and was wounded; made maj.-gen. Apr. 13, 1847; took part in the subsequent operations upon the city of Mexico, being conspicuous in the battles of Contreras and Churubusco; and at the storming of Chapultepec was severely wounded. He opposed the convention at Tacubaya, and incurred the displeasure of Gen. Scott, whose pointed and offensive remarks constrained the former to call a court of inquiry, where every charge was met and disproved, and his fame cleared of any reproach. Retiring to private life, he devoted himself to the management of his large estate. In 1850 he was a member of the Nashville Southern Convention, where he delivered a speech against the extreme ground taken by ultra Southern men. In April, 1861, he offered to raise a large force in Tenn. in aid of the secession cause, and was a maj.-gen. in the Confed. army. He escaped from Fort Donelson previous to its surrender.

Pinckney, CHARLES, LL.D. (N.J. Coll. 1787), statesman, b. Charleston, S.C., 1758; d. there Oct. 29, 1824. Grandson of Wm., commiss.-gen. of S.C. (1703–66). He was educated for the bar. At the capture of Charleston he was made prisoner, and sent to St. Augustine; member of the legisl. and of the Old Congress in 1784–7; member of the conv. which formed the U.S. Const. in 1787; pres. of the S.C. Const. Conv. of 1788; gov. of S.C. in 1789–92, 1796–8, and 1806–8; U.S. senator 1798–1801; a frequent and able speaker on the Republican side in that body; an active promoter of Jefferson's election to the presidency in 1800; minister to Spain in 1802–5, and negotiated a release from that power of all right and title to the terr. purchased by the U.S. from France; was subsequently, at several times, in the State legisl.; and was an M.C. in 1819–21, and an opponent of the Mo. Compromise.

Pinckney, CHARLES COTESWORTH, LL.D. (H.U. 1803), Revol. soldier and statesman, b. Charleston, S.C., 25 Feb. 1746; d. there 16 Aug. 1825. Son of Chief Justice Charles. Educated at Westminster and Oxford, Eng.; read law at the Temple, Lond.; and passed 9 months in the Roy. Milit. Acad. at Caen, France; returning in 1769, he established himself in the practice of law. Was a member of the first Prov. Congress of S.C. in June, 1775; was made a capt., and soon after col. 1st S.C. regt.; after the successful defence of Fort Moultrie, he joined the Northern army, and was an aide to Washington at Brandywine and Germantown; returning south in the spring of 1778, he took part in the unsuccessful exped. to Fla. In Jan. 1779 he presided over the senate of S.C. He displayed great resolution and intrepidity in the rapid march which saved Charleston from Gen. Prevost, and in the subsequent invasion of Ga. and the assault on the lines of Savannah. In the attack on Charleston, in April, 1780, he was in favor of holding out to the last extremity; and, on its surrender in May, became a prisoner, and suffered a rigorous and cruel confinement. Exchanged in Feb. 1782; made brig.-gen. 3 Nov. 1783. He resumed practice after the war. Was a member of the conv. that framed the U.S. Const., and declined successively the places of judge of the U.S Supreme Court, sec. of war, and sec. of state, tendered him by Washington; maj.-gen. of the State militia; app. in July, 1796, min.-plenip. to France; the hostility of the French Directory caused the rejection of our conciliatory propositions, and the order to Pinckney to quit the French territory. He withdrew to Amsterdam in Feb. 1797. When war became inevitable, the whole country resounded with his celebrated sentiment, "Millions for defence, but not a cent for tribute." Returning home, he was made by Washington a maj.-gen. Many years an active politician, and was candidate for the vice-presidency in 1800. As a lawyer he was disting. for accurate learning and strength of reasoning.

Pinckney, HENRY LAURENS, politician, son of Gov. Charles, b. Charleston, Sept. 24, 1794; d. there Feb. 3, 1863. S.C. Coll. 1812. He studied law with his bro.-in-law Robert Y. Hayne; was adm. to the bar; member of the legisl. in 1816–32; mayor of Charleston in 1832 and 1839–40; M.C. in 1833–7; and subsequently collector of the port, and a member of the legisl. Editor of the Charleston Mercury in 1819, and a prominent exponent of the State-rights party. Author of Memoirs of Jonathan Maxcy, Robert Y. Hayne, and Andrew Jackson.

Pinckney, GEN. THOMAS, a Revol. officer, and gov. of S.C. 1787–9, b. Charleston, Oct. 23, 1750; d. there Nov. 2, 1828. With his bro. Charles C., he was educated in Eng.;

studied law in the Temple; and was adm. to the bar in 1770. Joining the Cont. army, he rose to the rank of major; served as aide to Lincoln; and then with Count D'Estaing at the disastrous siege of Savannah in Oct. 1779. He disting. himself in the battle at Stono Ferry, and was aide to Gen. Gates in the battle near Camden, Aug. 1780, where he was desperately wounded and made prisoner. During Washington's administration he was offered the place of judge of the U.S. Court, which he declined; minister to Great Britain in 1792–6. In Nov. 1794 he was employed on a mission to the court of Spain, where he made the treaty of St. Ildefonso, securing to the U.S. the free navigation of the Mpi.; in Dec. 1796 he returned to Charleston; and was M.C. in 1799–1801. Mar. 27, 1812, President Madison app. him to the command of the 6th milit. dist. His last active field-service was at the battle of Horse-shoe Bend, where the military power of the Creeks was finally broken. He m. the dau. of Rebecca Motte.

Pine, Robert Edge, portrait-painter, b. Eng. 1742; d. Phila. Oct. 1788. Son of John, an Eng. designer and engraver. In 1760 and 1762 he drew the prizes from the Society for the Encouragement of the Arts for the best hist. designs. He painted portraits with some reputation; and in 1782 exhibited a series of pictures of scenes from Shakspeare. He afterward came to America, and exhibited in Phila., where he was befriended by the Hopkinson family, the earliest cast of the Venus de Medici seen here. His best-known pictures are Washington (1785), Gen. Gates, Baron Steuben, Charles Carroll, Gov. Colden, and Dr. Ogilvie, and "Canute on the Seashore."

Pinkney, Edward Coate, poet, son of Wm., b. Lond. Oct. 1802; d. Baltimore, Apr. 11, 1828. Educated at St. Mary's Coll., Balt. He was in the naval service in 1816–24; then practised law without success; next failed in an attempt to procure a commission in the naval service of Mexico; and in 1827 assumed for a brief period the control of a polit. journal, the Marylander. Author of "Rodolph and other Poems," 1825. An edition of his poems appeared in 1844 with a brief introd. by N. P. Willis, in the series of the Mirror Library, entitled "The Rococo." A biog. notice by Wm. Leggett is in N. Y. Mirror, 1827.

Pinkney, William, LL.D., lawyer, orator, and statesman, b. Annapolis, Md., March 17, 1764; d. Feb. 25, 1822. His father, a native of the north of Eng., was a loyalist; while his son manifested a decided attachment to the cause of his country. He quitted the study of medicine for the law, and in 1783 entered the office of Judge Chase. Adm. to practice in 1786, he soon attracted attention by his oratory; delegate to the State conv. to ratify the Federal Const. in 1788, and also to the Md. h. of delegates. He was m. in 1789 to the sister of Com. Rodgers; and in 1790 was elected a member of Congress; but his seat was contested on the ground of his not residing in the district for which he was chosen. After making a powerful argument, and obtaining a favorable decision, he declined the honor in consequence of the state of his private affairs. Member of the exec. council of Md. 1792–5, and again in 1795 a delegate to the legisl. from Anne Arundel Co. While he had thus attained a disting. political rank, he rose to the head of the bar. In 1796–1804 he was one of the commiss. in Lond. under Jay's treaty, and at the same time recovered for Md. a claim on the Bank of Eng. for $800,000. Atty.-gen. of Md. 1805. In 1806 he was made minister extraordinary to treat with the British govt. in conjunction with Monroe, after whose return, he was resident min. in 1807–11; in Sept. 1811, he was chosen to the State senate from Balt; was U.S. atty.-gen. Dec. 1811–14. He com. a vol. battalion at the battle of Bladensburg, and was severely wounded; M.C. in 1815–16, and made an able speech on the "treaty-making power." He accepted in Mar. 1816 an app. as special minister to Naples, whence he repaired to the Russian capital as resident minister, returning home in 1818; U.S. senator from 1820 to his d.; and made an elaborate and powerful speech against the clause in the bill for the admission of Mo. into the Union, which prohibited the introduction of slaves into the new State. His death was occasioned by overexertion in the Supreme Court in 1822 in a cause in which he took great interest, at a time when the state of his health unfitted him for application to study and business. — See Life by Henry Wheaton, N.Y., 1826; and by his Nephew, Rev. Wm. Pinkney, D.D., 8vo, 1853.

Pintard, John, LL.D., b. N.Y. City, 1759; d. there June 21, 1844. N.J. Coll. 1776. He studied but never practised law; during the Revol. was a soldier, and 3 years clerk to his uncle, Lewis Pintard, commissary for Amer. prisoners in New York. Edited the N.Y. Daily Advertiser a short time, then engaged in commerce; was long city inspector; and many years sec. of the Old Mutual Ins. Co. Founder of the N.Y. Hist. Society; a zealous promoter of other useful institutions, an intelligent antiquary, and author of a number of papers in periodicals; among them is an account of N. Orleans in the Med. Repository. Vice-pres. Amer. Bible Society.

Pinzon (pēn-thōn), Vincenzio Yanez, commanded "The Niña" in the voyage of Columbus (1492). In 1499 he led an exped., and explored a part of the coast of Brazil. Living in 1523. His elder bro., Martin Alonzo, who com. "The Pinta" in the first voyage of Columbus, d. 1493.

Pise, Charles Constantine, D.D., R.C. clergyman and author, b. Annapolis, Md., 1802; d. Brooklyn, May 26, 1866. Georget. Coll. His father was an Italian, his mother a native of Phila. He studied theology at Rome 2 years; on his return taught rhetoric and poetry in the sem. of Mount St. Mary's, Emmettsburg, and was ord. priest in 1825. After six months' labor at Fredericktown, Md., he was called to Baltimore, where he wrote his "History of the Church to the Reformation," 5 vols. 1830; "Father Rowland," a tale in answer to "Father Clement;" and the "Pleasures of Religion, and other Poems." His health failing, he again visited Rome, where he received the degree of D.D., and the honorary title of Knight of the Roman Empire. He

He led the advance in the exped. to Lexington on the morning of Apr. 19, 1775, and, surrounding the militia company there, ordered it to disperse. The conflict that ensued began the armed struggle that ended in Amer. independence. Pitcairn was charged with having given the order to fire on the Americans, but insisted to his dying day that the colonists fired first. He behaved with great gallantry at Bunker's Hill, where he was shot dead while entering the redoubt. His eldest son David, an eminent physician of Lond., d. in 1809. In the disputes between the soldiers and the people of Boston, he was the only British officer who dealt fairly with the latter.

She discovered the warmest friendship for the colonists of Va., which was remarkably displayed in 1607, when Capt. John Smith was taken prisoner, and about to be put to death. She interposed herself between the uplifted war-club and the intended victim, and prevailed upon her father to spare his life. (Considerable doubt has been thrown upon this romantic story by Mr. Charles Deane; see Preface to his ed. of Smith's "True Relation," and Rev. E. D. Neill's "Hist. of the Va. Comp. of Lond.") She was subsequently a frequent visitor to the settlements, to which she furnished provisions in times of great need. Informed in 1609 of an intended plot to destroy Smith and his party, she ventured alone through the forest at midnight to disclose it to Smith. Ab. the year 1612, while on a visit to Japazaws, chief of the Potomac, the latter sold her to Capt. Argall for a copper kettle; and, while a negotiation was pending with her father for her ransom, she was m. at Yorktown, Apr. 1613, to Mr. Thomas Rolfe, an Englishman of respectable character, with whom early in 1616 she embarked for Eng., where she was baptized, exchanging her Indian name for that of Rebecca. In London she received a visit from her former friend, Capt. Smith, who, for some unknown purpose, she had been taught to believe was dead. Poindexter, GEORGE, lawyer and politician, b. Loudon Co., Va., 1779; d. Jackson, Mpi., Sept. 5, 1853. Of Huguenot ancestry; left an orphan at an early age. He studied law at Richmond. In 1802 he removed from Milton, Va., where he had practised law for a year or two with success, to Mpi., and was in 1803 made atty.-gen. of the Territory; was its delegate to Congress in 1807–13; M.C. 1817–19; gov. 1819–21; U.S. senator 1831–5; and afterward a commiss. to investigate the Swartwout defalcation. In one of his many personal and political quarrels, he killed in a duel Abijah Hunt, a leading merchant in the Southwest; he was accused of unfairness in this quarrel, out of which grew bitter and prolonged controversies. In 1813–17 he was U.S. dist. judge for Mpi. He made the ablest speech on the conduct of Gen. Jackson, in the house in 1819, and to it Jackson in great measure owed his triumphant acquittal. He deserted his party, however, on the bank question; and became exceedingly obnoxious to Jackson by voting for Clay's resolution censuring the executive. He practised his profession from 1821 to 1831, and removed to Louisville, Ky., in 1835. He pub. "Revised Code of the Laws of Mpi.," 8vo, 1824. — See Biog. Sketch, Washington, 8vo, 1835.

Poinsett, JOEL ROBERTS, LL.D., statesman, b. Charleston, S.C., Mar. 2, 1779; d. Statesburg, S.C., Dec. 12, 1851. Of Huguenot descent, and the last of his family; he was taken to Eng. by his parents while a child, returning to Charleston in 1788. Educated at Greenfield, Ct., under Pres. Dwight, in 1793–5; he went abroad for his health in 1796, travelled in Europe and Asia, and studied medicine and military affairs. Returning home in 1809, he was sent by Pres. Madison to S. America to ascertain the condition of the people, and their prospects of success in the revol. just begun. After establishing friendly and commercial relations with Buenos Ayres, he crossed the continent to Chili. The Spanish authorities of Peru having seized and condemned several Amer. vessels, invaded Chili, and seized 10 Amer. whale-ships at Talcahuano, Mr. Poinsett, with a small force of Chilians, retook Talcahuano, and liberated the vessels. Hearing of the declaration of war with Eng., he determined to return home and enter the army; but peace was declared before he arrived. On his return to S.C. he was elected to the State legisl., and secured the construction of the important road over the Saluda Mountain. M.C. 1821–5; and discharged an important mission to Mexico in 1822, during the brief reign of Iturbide; minister to Mexico in 1825–9, and negotiated a treaty of commerce; while there he maintained his personal independence with spirit and courage during scenes of peculiar difficulty in the revol outbreaks of the times. He returned home to lead the Union party of S.C. in the nullification struggle; and was sec. of war under Van Buren in 1837–41; opposed to nullification, secession, and the Mexican war. He delivered a discourse on the "Promotion of Science," at the first anniv. of the Nat. Institution; pub. "Notes on Mexico, made in 1822," Phila. 1824, and some essays and orations on topics of manuf. and agric. industry. He endowed the Nat. Institution with a valuable museum. Polk, JAMES KNOX, 11th pres. of the U.S., b. Mecklenburg Co., N.C., Nov. 2, 1795; d. Nashville, Tenn., June 15, 1849. U. of N.C. 1818. His family, originally named Pollock, came from Ireland early in the 18th century; and his great-uncle Thomas was distinguished in the Revol. His father Samuel, a farmer, and a stanch Jeffersonian, removed to Tenn. in the fall of 1806. Mr. Polk studied in the office of Felix Grundy; was adm. to the Columbia bar in 1820, soon taking a high position; member of the legisl. in 1823–5; M.C. 1825–39, and speaker 1835–9; gov. of Tenn. in 1839–40; nominated to the presidency by the Democ. conv. at Baltimore, May 29, 1844; and elected by 170 votes to 105 for Henry Clay, the prime issue being the annexation of Texas. He was the early friend of Jackson, and strongly supported his measures while in Congress, opposing federal appropriations for internal improvements, a protective tariff, and a national bank; and was one of the most conspicuous adversaries of the administration of John Quincy Adams. In the session of 1833–4, as chairman of the com. of ways and means, he vindicated with much force the conduct of the pres. in ordering the removal of the public deposits from the Bank of the U.S. His administration was one of the most important in our history; it covers the settlement of the Oregon-boundary question, the creation of the dept. of the interior, the admission of Wisconsin as a State, the annexation of Texas and the consequent war with Mexico, and acquisition of New Mexico and California. He labored to organize the national treasury on the principles of the Constitution, and introduced into the govt. many financial and commercial reforms. He was an animated speaker, and a ready debater. — See his Life by John S. Jenkins, 12mo, 1850; Hist. of his Administration, by L. B. Chase, 8vo, 1850.

Cong. in 1774–5; in Oct. 1774 was chosen with Preble and Ward a general officer, and in Feb. 1775 a brig.-gen. He fought as a private soldier at Bunker's Hill, and was in the hottest of the fight. His app. as senior brigadier by Congress, a few days after, causing some difficulty in the adjustment of questions of rank, he declined it, and soon after retired to his farm. In the following year, however, when N.J. was overrun by the enemy, he headed the militia of his neighborhood, and marched to the Hudson River. He was an ingenious and skilful mechanic, and manuf. of arms, and was a zealous and devoted patriot. His son Lemuel, 40 years in the legisl., d. Southampton, Dec. 1819, a. 82.

Ponce de Leon (pōn′-thā dā lā-ōn), JUAN, the Spanish discoverer of Florida; d. Cuba, 1521. He disting. himself in the war with the Moors of Granada; accomp. Columbus on his second exped. in 1498; and became com. of the eastern province of Hispaniola. Sent by Ovando in 1509 to conquer the Island of Porto Rico, he amassed there great wealth, and hearing of an island situated to the north, in which was a miraculous fountain which could restore youth to the aged, he sailed in quest of it to the Bahamas in Mar. 1512. He failed to find the fountain, but landed, 8 April, 1512, some miles north of the site of St. Augustine, taking possession in the name of the King of Spain. He cruised there some months, doubled Cape Florida, sailed among the Tortugas, and returned to Porto Rico, leaving one of his men to continue the search. Returning to Spain in 1513, he received from Ferdinand permission to colonize the "Island of Florida," and the app. of gov.; in 1514 he led an unsuccessful exped. against the Carib. Indians. Proceeding in 1521 to take possession of his province, he encountered the determined hostility of the natives, was driven back to his ships mortally wounded, and d. soon after his arrival in Cuba.

Pontiac, chief of the Ottawas, b. on the Ottawa River, 1720; d. 1769. He settled near Michilimacinac, and was an ally of the French. In 1746, at the head of a body of Indians, mostly Ottawas, he successfully defended Detroit, then a French possession, against the attacks of some hostile northern tribes. He is supposed to have led the Ottawas at Braddock's defeat in 1755. In 1760, Maj. Rogers, with a detachment, took possession of the western posts under the treaty of Paris. Hating the English, the discontent of the Indians was increased by injudicious usage; and Pontiac, at the close of 1762, sent messengers to the different nations, proposing that in May, 1763, they should rise, massacre the English garrisons, and destroy the frontier settlements. 9 forts were attacked on the same day, and their garrisons either massacred or dispersed. Pontiac himself was to attack Detroit; but, his intention [illegible] he besieged it, and, to obtain food for his warriors, issued promissory-notes drawn upon birch-bark, and signed with the figure of an otter, which were all redeemed. The siege lasted from May 12 to Oct. 12, when it was raised, and the Indians sued for peace. Pontiac, unsubdued, endeavored to stir up the Indians on the Miami and in other places, and applied in vain for aid from the French com. at New Orleans. His followers gradually fell off; and in 1766 he formally submitted to the English rule. He was killed by an Illinois Indian at Cahokia, opposite St. Louis, while drunk. — See History of the Conspiracy of Pontiac by F. Parkman, 1851.

Pope, JOHN, brig.-gen. U.S.A., b. Ill. Mar. 12, 1823. West Point, 1842. His father, Judge Nathaniel (b. Va. 1785, d. St. Louis, Mo., 23 Jan. 1850), was a lawyer at Vandalia, Ill.; a deleg. to Congress from Ill. Terr. in 1816–18; register of the land-office at Edwardsville, Ill., 1818; app. judge U.S. Dist. Court of Ill. 1819. John entered the topog. engs.; was attached to the army of Gen. Taylor; was brev. 1st lieut. for Monterey, and capt. for Buena Vista, Feb. 23, 1847. He conducted the Minnesota exploring exped. in 1849–50; then that to test the feasibility of boring artesian wells in the Llano Estacado, between Texas and N. Mexico; and in 1855 that to survey the route of the Pacific Railroad. In 1854–9 he was exploring the Rocky Mountains. He became capt. July 1, 1856. In an address in 1860 on the subject of "Fortifications," del. at Cincinnati, he denounced the policy of Pres. Buchanan in unsparing terms, and was court-martialled; but the matter was dropped. He was one of the officers who escorted Mr. Lincoln to Washington; was made brig.-gen. vols. May 17, 1861; and app. to a com. in Mo., where his operations were very successful. In an engagement at the Blackwater, Dec. 13, he routed the enemy, and took a number of prisoners. In Feb. 1862, Gen. Halleck intrusted him with the com. of the land-force destined to co-operate with Flag-Officer Foote's flotilla. Marching on New Madrid, he captured that place, Mar. 13; and, after the surrender of Island No. 10 (Apr. 8), took a large number of prisoners; Mar. 21, 1862, he became maj.-gen. of vols.; in April he took com. of a grand division of Gen. Halleck's army; vigorously pursued the enemy in retreat from Corinth; and was summoned to Washington to take com. of the Army of Va. June 27, 1862; made brig.-gen. U.S.A. July 14. Aug. 17 and 18 Gen. Pope drew back his whole force across the Rappahannock; from this date, for 15 days, Gen. Pope, re-enforced by a part of the Army of the Potomac, fought continuously a superior force of the enemy under Lee, on the line of the Rappahannock, at Manassas Junction, at Groveton, and Chantilly. He withdrew his force behind Difficult Creek, and thence within the fortifications of Washington; and, Sept. 3, was at his own request relieved of the com. of the Army of Va., and assigned to that of the Dept. of the North-west. In Dec. he testified at Washington before the court-martial on Fitz John Porter, accused by him of misconduct before the enemy at the second battle of Bull Run. Brev. maj.-gen. U.S.A. 13 Mar. 1865 for capture of Island No. 10. Author of "Explorations from the Red River to the Rio Grande," in "Pacif. R.R. Popkin, JOHN SNELLING, D.D. (H. U. 1815), clergyman and scholar, b. Boston, June 19, 1771; d. Cambridge, Ms., March 2, 1852. Son of Col. John, Revol. officer. H.U. 1792. He exercised the vocation of a teacher for a short time in Woburn and in Cambridge; and was Greek tutor at H.U. in 1795–8. Member of the Am. Academy. Ord. pastor of the Federal-street Church, Boston, July 10, 1799; dismissed Nov. 28, 1802; installed pastor of the First Church in Newbury, Sept. 19, 1804; dismissed Oct. 5, 1815, having accepted the app. of prof. of Greek in H.U. In 1826–33 he was Eliot professor of Greek literature. During his ministry, he pub. a number of sermons of a high character. An interesting vol. of his productions has appeared, consisting of lectures, and extracts from sermons, with a Memoir of his Life by C. C. Felton, 1852.

Porter, ALEXANDER J., jurist and senator, b. near Armagh, Ireland, 1786; d. Attakapas, La., Jan. 13, 1844. His father fell in the rebellion of 1798. He came to the U.S. in 1801; engaged in mercantile occupations in Nashville, Tenn.; but, having studied law, was in 1807 adm. to the bar. The defects of his early education were remedied by his own individual efforts; and by his industry and talent he atttained the front rank of jurists and politicians. Removing to St. Martinsville, La., in 1810, he was active in forming the State const. in 1811; became a judge of the Supreme Court in 1821; and was U. S. senator in 1834–7. Re-elected in 1843, ill health prevented his taking his seat. A Whig in politics, he voted to censure Pres. Jackson for the removal of the deposits; favored Calhoun's motion to reject petitions for the abolition of slavery in the Dist. of Col.; favored the division among the States of the surplus revenue, and the recognition of the independence of Texas. To the labors of Judges Porter, Matthews, and Martin, is due the system of jurisprudence at present existing in Louisiana.

Porter, GEN. ANDREW, Revol. officer, b. Worcester, Montgomery Co., Pa., Sept. 24, 1743; d. Harrisburg, Nov. 16, 1813. He taught a school at Phila. from 1767 till June 19, 1776, when he was made by Congress a capt. of marines, and ordered on board the frigate "Effingham;" transferred soon after to the art., in which, from his previous studies, he was qualified to be eminently useful; he served with great reputation for science and bravery; was in 1782 promoted to major; and at the end of the war was col. of the 4th or Pa. Art. He was engaged at Trenton, Princeton, Brandywine, and Germantown. In the latter action nearly all his company were killed or taken prisoners; and in the first, he received on the field, in person, the commendation of Washington. Detached in Apr. 1779 to join the exped. of Sullivan against the Indians, he suggested to Gen. Clinton the idea of damming the outlet of Otsego Lake, by which means the water was raised sufficiently to enable the troops to be transported by boats to Tioga Point. In 1784-8 he was a commiss. for running the State boundary-lines; was in 1800 made brig.-gen. of State militia, and soon after maj.-gen.; and in 1809 was app. surv.-gen. of Pa. He declined, on account of his advanced age, the offices of brig.-gen. in the army, and sec. at war of the U.S., offered him by Madison during the war of 1812. Of his sons, George B. d. gov. of Michigan, David R. was gov. of Pa., and Gen. James M. sec. of war. — Rogers.

Porter, BENJAMIN F., jurist, b. Charleston, S.C., Sept. 1808. He was self-educated. Was adm. to the bar in Charleston at an early age, afterward studied medicine, which in 1830 he practised in Ala., but returned to the law, and was chosen to the legisl. in 1832; and was in 1835 reporter of the State. In 1840 he was elevated to the bench, but, doubting the constitutionality of his election, resigned the office. He edited 14 vols. of the Ala. Reports, and translated the "Elements of the Institutes" of Heineccius. He has also contrib. to periodicals; has been frequently an orator on public occasions; and has pub., among other works, a collection of poems, chiefly lyrical, in Charleston.

Porter, DAVID, D.D. (Wms. Coll. 1811), minister of Spencertown 1787–1803, and of Catskill, N.Y., 1803–31, b. Hebron, Ct., 27 May, 1761; d. Catskill, Jan. 7, 1851. D.C. 1784. He served nearly a year in the Revol. army. He pub. "Dissertation on Baptism," 1809, and some sermons. Agent of several benev. societies; member of the A.B.C.F.M., and, though eccentric, a man of great influence. — Sprague.

Porter, DAVID, commodore U.S.N., b. Boston, Feb. 1, 1780; d. Pera, near Constantinople, March 3, 1843. Midshipm. Apr. 16, 1798; lieut. Oct. 8, 1799; master com. Apr. 20, 1806; capt. July 2, 1812. His father Capt. David com. a Boston merchant-ship, and was actively engaged in the Revol.; afterward removed to Baltimore, and, engaging in the W. India trade, introduced his son to the naval career at the age of 16. The son served in "The Constellation" during her famous action with "The Insurgente" in Feb. 1799: his good conduct in the action, and in securing the prize, caused his promotion soon after. In Jan. 1800, he was wounded in an engagement with a pirate off St. Domingo; in Aug. 1801 he was 1st lieut. of the schooner "Enterprise," which captured a Tripolitan cruiser of superior force. While 1st lieut. of the flag-ship "New York," he com. a boat exped. which destroyed several feluccas laden with wheat under the batteries of Tripoli, and was again wounded; transferred to "The Philadelphia," which was captured while aground the harbor of Tripoli in Oct. 1803, he was months a prisoner. In 1806, while in com. of "The Enterprise," he severely punished 12 Spanish gunboats which rashly attacked him in sight of Gibraltar. App. to the small frigate "Essex" (32 guns), he sailed from New York, July 3, 1812, made several valuable captures, and took, after an action of 8 minutes, H.B.M. ship "Alert" of 20 guns, — the first ship-of-war taken in the contest. Dec. 12, he captured the British govt. packet "Nocton," with $55,000 in specie; and, at the close of Jan. 1813, sailed to the Pacific, where he captured a number of British whaling and trading vessels. March 28, 1814, "The Essex" was captured after a severe fight in the neutral port of Valparaiso by the British frigate "Phœbe" (36) and "The Cherub" (28). He pub. a narrative of this remarkable cruise (N.Y. 2 vols. 8vo, 1817). From 1815 to 1823 he was one of the navy commiss., and in the latter year com. a successful exped. to suppress piracy in the Gulf of Mexico. Subsequently made cognisant of an insult to the American flag at Foxardo in Porto Rico, he obliged the authorities to make an apology. This led to his recall, to court-martial for transgressing orders, and sentence of suspension for 6 months. He resigned Aug. 18, 1826, entered the Mexican navy as com.-chief, but in 1829 took the U.S. consulship to Algiers. Upon the occupation of Algiers by France, he was chargé d'affaires to Constantinople, 1831–40, and was res. min. in 1839–43. His correspondence with a friend in New York was pub. in 1835 as "Constantinople and its Environs." While in Turkey, Porter negotiated several important treaties, and held his position as minister till his death. He was a humane as well as a brave man, and a superior seaman. — Duyckinck.

Porter, DAVID D., adm. U.S.N., younger son of the preceding, b. Phila. June, 1813. Midshipm. Feb. 2, 1829; lieut. 27 Feb. 1841; com. 22 Apr. 1861; was attached to the coast-survey in 1836–40; and in "The Congress" cruised in Mediterranean and Brazilian waters 4 years. In 1845 he was ordered to the Washington Observatory. During the Mexican war he had charge of the naval rendezvous at N. Orleans; was present at Vera Cruz, Tuspan, and Tabasco, also in land-fights at Tamultee and Chiflon; then returned to the coast-survey; in 1849–53 com. successively the Cal. mail-steamers "Panama" and "Georgia;" and in 1861 was sent in the steam-sloop "Powhatan" to Pensacola to join the Gulf block. squad. In the exped. against New Orleans early in 1862, he was placed in charge of a flotilla of 21 mortar-boats and several steamers, with which he co operated with Flag-Officer Farragut in the capture of the Mpi. forts and the unsuccessful siege of Vicksburg. He was afterward ordered with his flotilla to the James River; and in Oct. took com. of the Mpi. gunboat fleet with the rank of acting rear-adm. In Jan. 1863 his fleet captured Arkansas Post, and, Apr. 29, destroyed the formidable batteries at Grand Gulf. During the siege of Vicksburg, his mortar-fleet threw shells into the city and works 40 days without intermission. Made rear-adm. July 4, 1863, for the capture of Vicksburg. While co-operating with Gen Banks's Red-river exped. in Apr. 1864, his fleet was saved at Grand Ecore by the skill of Lieut.-Col. Bailey, who constructed a dam across the river, giving sufficient water for their passage over the bar. Ordered to the com. of the N.A. block. squad., he attacked Fort Fisher, N.C., in Dec. 1864, and again in Jan. 1865 when captured by assault. Vice-adm. July 25, 1866; adm. 17 Oct. 1870; supt. Naval Acad. 1866–70.

Porter, DAVID R., gov. of Pa. 1839–45, b. Pa. 1788; d. Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 6, 1867. Son of Gen. Andrew. He was a lawyer; often a member of each branch of the State legisl., and was extensively engaged in the manuf. of iron. Charges of irregularity in his election as gov. in 1838, in Phila. Co., gave rise to much feeling in the organization of the legisl.; and disgraceful proceedings at the State capital, since famous as the "Buckshot War," were the consequence.

Porter, EBENEZER, D.D. (D.C. 1814), pres. And. Theol. Sem. 1827–34, b. Cornwall, Ct., Oct. 5, 1772; d. Andover, Apr. 8, 1834. D.C. 1792. His father Thos. Porter, a farmer and a prominent politician, removed in 1779 with his family to Tinmouth, Rutland Co., Vt. He taught school some months; then studied divinity; and Sept. 6, 1796, was ord. pastor of the Cong. church at Washington, Ct. His health becoming impaired, he removed in Apr. 1812 to Andover as prof. of sacred rhetoric. Dr. Porter pub., beside many occas. sermons, "The Young Preacher's Manual," 1819; "Analysis of Vocal Inflection," 1824; "Analysis of Rhetorical Delivery," 1827; "Rhetorical Reader and Exercises," 1831; "Syllabus of Lectures," 1832; an "Abridgment of Owen on Spiritual-Mindedness," 1833; "Lectures on Homiletics and Preaching," 1834, and on "Public Prayer;" together with "Sermons and Addresses," and an abridgment of Owen on the 130th Psalm. Since his death, "The Biblical Reader," and "Lectures on Eloquence and Style," have also been published.

the Potomac, he was in Aug. placed at the head of a division; and in May, 1862, took com. of the 5th corps. He directed the siege-works before Yorktown, and was gov. of that place for a short time after its evacuation; com. the extreme right before Richmond, received the fiercest attacks of the enemy, and was promoted for his services. Temporarily attached to Gen. Pope's com. during the battles which followed the evacuation of the Peninsula, he avoided all participation in them; and, formal charges being made against him, he was deprived of his com., but, at the request of Gen. McClellan, was restored to duty, and took part in the Md. campaign; com. the reserve in the battle of Antietam. In Nov. he was ordered to Washington for trial by court-martial, and was cashiered 21 Jan., 1863, for violation of the 9th and 52d articles of war. The grounds for his appeal to the Pres. in 1870 for a reversal of this sentence are stated in Old and New for June, 1870.

Porter, GEORGE B., gov. of Mich. Terr. 1831–4, son of Gen. Andrew, b. Lancaster, Pa., 1790; d. Detroit, Mich., 6 July, 1834. Liberally educated, and a lawyer; he was an active and thorough business-man.

Another account states that he was b. in Swansea, Wales, and was a journeyman printer, changing his name from Thomas Powell after he went on the stage. His widowed mother having removed to Wales, Tyrone made his début in the Cardiff Theatre as Romeo. He played at provincial theatres till 1818, when he retired; but in 1821 re-appeared on the London stage. His first decided success there was in 1824, in the part of Paddy O'Halloran; and he thenceforth devoted himself to the delineation of Irish characters, in which he was unrivalled. In 1833–5 and again in 1840–1, he visited the U.S., where he was highly successful. He embarked for Europe, Mar. 11, 1841, in the steamship "President," which was never heard of afterward. He pub. "Impressions of America," 2 vols. 8vo, 1835; "The King's Secret," a novel; "The Lost Heir," &c.

Powers, Grant, a Cong. clergyman, b. Hollis, N.H., May 31, 1784; d. Goshen, Ct., Apr. 10, 1841. Dartm. Coll. 1810. He studied theology; was minister at Haverhill in 1815–29, and at Goshen from Aug. 27, 1829, to his death. Author of "Essay upon the Influence of the Imagination on the Nervous System, contributing to False Hopes in Religion;" a "History of the Coos Country," 12mo, 1841; and "Centennial Address at Hollis," 8vo, 1830.

Powers, Hiram, sculptor, b. Woodstock, Vt., July 29, 1805. He spent his youth on his father's farm; emigrated with his family to O., and, on the death of his father, established himself in Cincinnati, being successively employed in a reading-room, in a produce-store, and with a clockmaker. From a German sculptor he learned the art of modelling in plaster, and for 7 years he directed the wax-work dept. of the museum at Cincinnati, but in 1835 went to Washington, where he was for some time profitably employed in modelling busts of disting. men. With the assistance of Mr. N. Longworth of Cincinnati, he was able to establish himself in Florence, where he has since resided. In 1838 he produced an ideal statue of Eve, pronounced by Thorwaldsen a work which any sculptor might be proud to claim as his masterpiece; in 1839 he finished his model of the "Greek Slave," his most popular work, of which he has made several duplicates in marble. Among his other well-known works are the "Fisher-Boy;" "Il Penseroso;" "Proserpine," a bust; "California;" "America," modelled for the Crystal Palace at Sydenham, Eng.; a bronze statue of Webster, now erected in the State-house grounds at Boston; and portrait-statues of Washington and of Calhoun. The latter, his best work of the kind, after being shipwrecked on Long Island, was safely deposited in Charleston. Among his numerous busts are those of Adams, Jackson, Webster, Calhoun, Marshall, Everett, and Van Buren. Mr. Powers was the inventor of a useful process of modelling in plaster. Died Florence, Italy, June 27, 1873.

Powhatan, emperor of the Indians in Va. when the English made their first settlement in 1607; d. Apr. 1618. He was the most powerful of the Indian kings, swaying the sceptre over 30 nations numbering 8,000 souls. He was remarkable for vigor and energy, skilful in intrigue, courageous in battle, and magnanimous in victory. He lived, for a savage, in great dignity and splendor; was always attended by a guard of 40 warriors, and watched by a sentry at night. He was hostile to the English, and came near destroying them repeatedly; but, on the marriage of his dau. Pocahontas to Mr. Rolfe, he became friendly, and remained at peace. His principal residence was Werowocomoco, on York River, in the present county of Gloucester.

Pownall, THOMAS, LL.D., an English statesman and writer, b. Lincoln, 1722; d. Bath, Eng., 25 Feb. 1805. U. of Camb. 1743. He was made sec. to the commiss. for trade and plantations in 1745, and was in the commissariat of the army in Germany; in 1753 he came to Amer. as sec. to Sir D. Osborne, whom he succeeded as lieut.-gov. of N. J. in 1755; member of the Congress at Albany in 1754; gov. of Ms. 1757–60; gov. of S.C. 1760–1; and, returning to Eng., was made director-gen. of the office of control, with rank of col. Entering parliament in 1768, he strenuously opposed the measures of the ministry with respect to America; and his speeches, made at various important crises, form an instructive comment upon the mistaken policy of the times. He retired from parliament in 1780. Foreseeing the danger to Eng. of a union among the Colonies, when the Congress met at Albany to devise the best means of defence against the French, he presented a powerful memorial to Lord Halifax upon the subject. As gov. of Ms. he did not give his confidence to Hutchinson, Oliver, and their party, which they resented by slandering him to the people and the clergy. He pub. in 1766 "The Administration of the Colonies;" "Topog. Description of such Parts of N. Amer. as are contained in the Annexed Map (that of L. Evans, corrected, and continued to 1775) of the Middle British Colonies," &c.; besides a number of works on archæology, antiquities, and politics.

Pratt, BENJAMIN, lawyer and jurist. b. Cohasset, Ms., Mar. 13, 1710; d. Jan. 5, 1763. H. U. 1737. Bred to a mechanical employment by his parents, who were poor, the loss of a limb in early life led him to study; and he soon became conspicuous among the lawyers of the day in learning and eloquence. He was a representative of Boston 1757–9, and was a zealous lover of freedom. The friendship of Gov. Pownall procured him the app. of chief justice of N.Y., which he did not long live to enjoy. He was a man of great research and learning, wrote some fugitive verses, and had made extensive collections in view of writing a history of N. Eng., but died too soon to accomplish it. His wife was the dau. of Judge Auchmuty.

Pratt, ENOCH, pastor Cong. church, W. Barnstable, Ms., 1807–35, b. Middleborough, Ms., 1781; d. Brewster, 2 Feb. 1860. Brown U. 1803. Ord. Barnstable 28 Oct. 1807; resigned 1837. Author of a "History of Eastham, Wellfleet, and Orleans, Ms.," 8vo, 1844.

Pratt, LOUISA KIRBY; d. Cincinnati, 2 Oct. 1864. Author of a series of essays in the Home Journal over the signature of "Bell Smith." Her Letters from Paris were pub. with the title "Bell Smith Abroad."

Pratt, MATTHEW, an early portrait-painter of Phila. (1734–1805). He studied 4 years in Lond. with West; returned to Phila. in 1768; assisted Peale, his schoolmate, in establishing his museum; and painted many of the eminent men of his time, among others the prominent members of the convention which framed the Federal Constitution in 1787. — Tuckerman.

Pratt, PHINEHAS, an early settler of Weymouth, Ms., d. Charlestown, Ms., 19 Apr. 1680, a. 90. He came to N.E. in June, 1622, with Weston's colony, but, on its failure, fled from the place in Feb. 1623, and reached Plymouth, 30 miles distant, pursued by Indians "in times of frost and snow, as a deer chased with wolves." In 1662 he addressed a petition to the Gen. Court, accomp. with a narrative of the first planting, which he called a "Declaration of the Affairs of the English People that first inhabited N. England." — See Ms. Hist. Coll. 4, iv. 476; Drake's History of Boston.

Pratt, THOMAS G., gov. of Md. 1844–8, b. Washington, D.C., 1805; d. Baltimore, Nov 9, 1869. N. J. Coll. He was bred a lawyer; frequently served in the Md. senate; was U.S. senator in 1851–7; delegate to the Chicago Convention 1864, and to the Phila. National Convention in 1867.

Pratt, ZADOCK, an eminent citizen of N.Y., b. Stephentown, Rensselaer Co., N.Y., Oct. 30, 1790; d. Bergen, N.J., 6 Apr. 1871. He began life a poor boy, but by his industry gained a large fortune. In 1812 he began business as a saddler and harnessmaker. Devoting his attention to tanning in 1817, he attained eminent success; and his name will ever be associated with Prattsville, where he located a tannery in 1824. Elected to Congress in 1836, and again in 1842, he labored successfully for the public good. His career in Congress will be remembered for his efforts in behalf of the GEORGE, d. of a wound at the battle of Manassas, a. 32.

Pratz, LE PAGE DU, French traveller, b. Holland; d. 1775. Entering the French service, he fought in Germany, and, having obtained an interest in the French Western Land Co., left La Rochelle in May, 1718, to take possession of lands ceded them near New Orleans. After some fruitless efforts at colonization, he ascended the Mpi. in 1720; settled with the Natchez Indians, by whom he was well received, but with whom he had a conflict in Dec. 1723, and his property was burned. Peace restored, he explored the interior of the country, visiting the region watered by the Missouri and the Arkansas, and, after 8 years of labor, returned to N. Orleans, where he was treasurer of the company until the office was suppressed, when he returned to France; and 25 June, 1734, he landed at La Rochelle. He pub. his "History of Louisiana," giving an account of his adventures, 3 vols. 12mo, 1758, Paris, — a work of remarkable exactness. — Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Univ.

Preble, EDWARD, commo. U.S.N., son of Gen. Jedediah, b. Portland, Me., Aug. 15, 1761; d. there Aug. 25, 1807. From childhood he discovered a firm, resolute, and persevering temper, and a strong disposition for perils and adventures, which led him to make a voyage to Europe in a letter-of-marque in 1777. In 1779 he served as midshipman under Capt. John Foster Williams in "The Protector," and having been taken in the Penobscot exped., under Capt. Saltonstall, was confined in the Jersey prison-ship, but obtained his release at N.Y. by the interest of Col. William Tyng. He next served as first lieut. of the sloop-of-war "Winthrop," Capt. Little, and boarded and captured an Eng. brig of superior force, lying in Penobscot harbor, under circumstances which gave the action great éclat. He remained in this ship until Dec. 1782, and occupied himself as shipmaster until Feb. 9, 1798, when he was named one of the five lieuts. app. by the govt., and in the fall and winter of that year made two cruises as com. of the brig "Pickering." Capt. May 14, 1799, he made in the frigate "Essex," of 36 guns, in 1800, a voyage to the E. Indies for the protection of our trade. Near the end of the year, he arrived in N.Y. in feeble health, and so continued until May, 1803, when he took com. of the frigate "Constitution;" and in June took charge of the squad. sent against Tripoli. He set sail in Aug., and, arriving at his destination in Sept., prevented a war between the emperor of Morocco and the U.S., and brought the bashaw of Tripoli to terms by a series of skilful bombardments. Having been superseded by Barron, Sept. 8, 1804, he obtained leave to return home. Congress voted him the thanks of the nation and an emblematical medal. — See Preble Family by Capt. Geo. H. Preble, 1868.

He studied law, and commenced practice in Montpelier in 1803, soon acquiring the reputation of a learned, eloquent, and upright lawyer, and becoming one of the foremost men of the Vt. bar. In 1824–5 he represented Montpelier in the legisl.; in 1829 he was elected chief justice of the Supreme Court of Vt.; and was U.S. senator in 1831–42, where he did much to effect the passage of a law against duelling in the Dist. of Col.; U.S. dist. judge from 1842 to his death.

Prentiss, SERGEANT SMITH, lawyer and orator, b. Portland, Me., Sept. 30, 1808; d. Longwood, near Natchez, Mpi., July 1, 1850. Bowd. Coll. 1826. He went to Mpi. in 1827; was tutor a year or two in a private family near Natchez; studied law; and was adm. to the bar in 1829, when his first speech before a jury is said to have been marked by that wit and eloquence which never deserted him. He was law-partner of Gen. Felix Huston. In 1832 he moved to Vicksburg, became at once leader of the bar in that section of the State, and, by gaining a suit involving the most valuable portion of the city, gained a high reputation as a lawyer; while the ground which he received as a fee made him one of the wealthiest men in the State. He was elected to the State legisl. in 1835. His speech in the U.S. house of representatives in 1837, which lasted 3 days, in which he claimed the seat held by Col. Claiborne (which claim was only rejected by the casting-vote of the speaker, J. K. Polk), established his reputation as one of the ablest parliamentary debaters in the country. The candidate thus sent back to the people canvassed the State, and was by

Prescott, COL. WILLIAM, a disting. Revol. officer, bro. of Oliver, b. Groton, Ms., 20 Feb. 1726; d. Oct. 13, 1795. A provincial lieut. at the capture of Cape Breton in 1754; capt. under Gen. Winslow in Nova Scotia, 1756. He was offered a commis. in the regular army, which he declined. Inheriting a large estate at Pepperell, he resided there until the breaking-out of the war, filling various municipal offices. In 1774 he was app. to com. a regt. of minute-men, with which he marched (19 April, 1775) to Lexington. The British having retreated, he proceeded to Cambridge, where he entered the prov. army. June 16, 1775, he was ordered to Charlestown with 1,000 men, and directed to throw up works on Bunker's Hill. On arriving at the ground, it was perceived that the neighboring elevation, called Breed's Hill, was a more suitable station; and on it the defences, consisting of a redoubt and breastwork, were erected during the night. The following day, a large British force, under Gen. Howe, attacked, and (after a contest among the most memorable in American annals, and after sustaining a loss equal to the American force engaged) succeeded in dislodging him.

Few of Prescott's men had ever seen an action: they had been laboring all night, and were left without supplies of ammunition or refreshment, and, thus fatigued and destitute, had to bear the repeated assaults of a numerous, well-appointed veteran army. Col. Prescott was one of the last to leave the intrenchments when he found it necessary to order a retreat. Early in 1777 he resigned, and returned home, but in the autumn of the same year joined the Northern army under Gen. Gates as a volunteer, and was present at the capture of Burgoyne. He subsequently sat in the Ms. legislature for several years.

Prescott, WILLIAM, LL.D. (H.U. 1824), lawyer and jurist, son of the preceding, b. Pepperell, Ms., Aug. 19, 1762; d. Boston, Dec. 8, 1844. H.U. 1783. He taught school first at Brooklyn, Ct., and then at Beverly, Ms., where, during two years, he also studied with Mr. Dane, the disting. lawyer, and where, in 1787–9, he engaged in successful practice. Removing to Salem, he served as its representative, and as senator of Essex Co. in the legisl.; in 1806, and again in 1813, he was offered a seat on the bench of the Supreme Court of Ms., which he declined. He removed to Boston in 1808; served for some years as one of the governor's council; was a deleg. to the Hartford Conv. in 1814; in 1818 was judge of the C. C. P. for Suffolk; and was in 1820 a delegate to the State Const. Conv. Member of the Amer. Acad. of Arts and Sciences. Two of his sons survived him, one of whom was William H. Prescott the historian. The other, EDWARD GORDON (b. Salem, Jan. 2, 1804, H.U. 1825), was first a lawyer, but in 1837 settled as an Epis. clergyman in N. J.; d. 11 Apr. 1844.

Prescott, WILLIAM HICKLING, LL.D. (Col. Coll. 1840; H.U. 1843; Oxf. U. 1850), historian, b. Salem, Ms., 4 May, 1796; d. Boston, 28 Jan. 1859. H.U. 1814. Son of Judge William and Catharine Greene, dau. of Thomas Hickling, who for nearly 50 years was U.S. consul at St. Michael's. His grandfather Col. William com. at the battle of Bunker's Hill. His preparatory studies were directed by Rev. J. S. J. Gardiner. An injury to his eye while at college determined him to adopt a literary instead of a professional career. In 1815–17 he travelled in England, France, and Italy, but, having vainly sought aid from eminent oculists, returned home with his sight permanently impaired, and was obliged to use the eyes of others in his subsequent literary researches and labors. In May, 1820, he m. Susan Amory. He began in 1824 his contribs. to the N. Amer. Review, which were pub. in one volume in 1845; in 1834 he wrote the Memoir of Charles Brockden Brown for Sparks's Amer. Biog.; in Jan. 1826 he began his "History of Ferdinand and Isabella," pub. in 1838 in 3 vols. 8vo, the success of which placed him in the front rank of historians. His "Conquest of Mexico" app. in 3 vols. 8vo, 1843; "Conquest of Peru," 2 vols. 8vo, 1847; "History of Philip II. of Spain," 3 vols. 1855–8, which he intended to issue in 6 vols., but which he did not live to complete. In 1856 he pub. an edition of Robertson's "Charles the Fifth," with notes and a valuable supplement. His works were translated into the French, Spanish, Italian, German, and Dutch languages. His merits as an historian are a spirit of thorough research, an unequalled impartiality, and a remarkable clearness, animation, and grace of style. He was a member of the most prominent learned bodies of the Old and New World, and was in the highest degree a social, kindly, and generous man. — See Life by George Ticknor, 1864.

Preston, ISAAC TRIMBLE, jurist, b. Va. in 1793; d. July 5, 1852, in consequence of a steamboat disaster on Lake Pontchartrain, near New Orleans. Y.C. 1812. He studied law at Litchfield, Ct. He arrived in Plymouth in 1621; was gov. in 1634, 1638, and from 1657 to 1673, and was an assist. in 1635–7 and in 1639–57. He lived at Nauset, or Eastham, of which he was one of the first settlers in 1644, until rechosen governor; and in 1663 he removed to Plymouth. He was a man of eminent worth and piety, and an impartial magistrate. Strict in his religious opinions, he zealously opposed those whom he believed to be heretics, particularly the Quakers. He was a friend of learning, and, in opposition to the clamors of the ignorant, procured revenues for the support of grammar-schools in the Colony.

Prince, Thomas, minister and chronologist, b. Sandwich, Ms., May 15, 1687; d. Boston, Oct. 22, 1758. H.C. 1707. Son of Samuel of Sandwich, and grandson of Elder John of Hull, who came to N.E. in 1633. He went to Eng. Apr. 1, 1709, and preached some time at Combe, in Suffolk; but, being strongly attached to his native land, returned to Boston, July 20, 1717, and was ord. over the Old South Church, Oct. 1, 1718, as colleague of Dr. Sewall. He was eminent as a preacher, linguist, and man of learning. Mr. Prince began in 1703, and continued more than 50 years, a collection of public and private papers relating to the civil and religious history of N.E. This he pub. in the form of annals, 12mo 1736, and 3 numbers of the second part in 1756, but spent so much time upon the introductory epitome, beginning at the creation, that he brought his history only down to 1633. His collection of MSS. was deposited in the Old South Church, and was partly destroyed by the British, who occupied that building in 1775–6; many important facts relating to the history of the country being thus irrecoverably lost. His books and MSS. now form part of the Pub. Library of the city of Boston. Besides a great number of sermons, he pub. an "Introduction and Notes to Mason's History of the Pequot War," 1736; various biographical and other papers in the Christian History, 1743–4; "An Improvement on the Doctrine of Earthquakes," &c., 1755; "Life of Nehemiah Walter, appended to his Sermons," 1755; Notes and Appendix to "Williams's Redeemed Captive," 1757; "The Psalms, &c., with Historical Preface and Notes," 1758; several lives in "Mayhew's Indian Converts," 1727; and an account of the first appearance of the Aurora Borealis.

Prince, Thomas, son of the preceding, b. Boston, Feb. 27, 1722; d. Oct. 1748. H.U. 1740. He edited the earliest American periodical, the Christian History, containing accounts of the revival and propagation of religion in Great Britain and America for 1743, 2 vols. 8vo, pub. weekly, 1744–6

Pring, Daniel, commodore R.N.; d. Port Royal, Jamaica, Nov. 29, 1847. He early entered the navy; was a midshipm. at the attack on Copenhagen in 1801; was made a lieut. in 1807; com. the schooner "Paz" on the Halifax station in 1812; was transferred to service on Lake Ontario in 1813, and promoted to commander; and in 1814 was app. to com. "The Linnet," a brig of 16 guns, in the squad. of Com. Downie on Lake Champlain. In the celebrated engagement with the fleet of Macdonough, he sustained a severe conflict with "The Eagle" (of 20 guns), but was eventually compelled to strike. In 1815 he was promoted to post-captain, and early in 1846 to commodore. — Morgan's Celebrated Canadians.

Proctor, Henry, a British lieut.-gen., b. of an ancient family in Wales, 1765; d. Liverpool, Eng., 1822. He joined the army as lieut. 43d Foot, Dec. 1781; became maj. May, 1795; lieut.-col. 41st, Oct. 1800; col. July, 1810; maj.-gen. June, 1813; and, on the breaking-out of the war of 1812, came to Canada in com. of the 41st Regt. He was despatched to Amherstburg by Gen. Brock to prevent the landing of Hull, whose forces he repulsed from that place, and defeated at Brownston, and gained a brilliant victory over Winchester on the River Raisin, for which he was promoted to the rank of brig.-gen. In May, 1813, he was def ated at Fort Meigs by Gen. Harrison; Aug. 2, he was signally defeated by Major Croghan in defence of Fort Stephenson, Lower Sandusky; and Oct. 5, 1813, was totally defeated at the battle of the Thames by Gen. Harrison. He was afterward tried by court-martial, and suspended from rank and pay for 6 months. He com. again during the war, and rose to the rank of lieut.-gen. — Morgan's Celebrated Canadians.

Pugh, Ellis, Quaker preacher, b. Dolgelly, Merioneth Co., Wales, June, 1656; d. Oct. 10, 1718. He began to preach ab. 1680, and in 1687 settled at Gwynedd, Pa. He revisited his native place in 1706–8. Author of a treatise called "A Salutation to the Britains," written in Welsh. — Collection of Quaker Memorials.

Pugh, George Ellis, lawyer and senator, b. Cincinnati, O., Nov. 28, 1822. Miami U. 1840. In 1847 he was capt. in the 4th Regt. O. Vols. in the Mexican war; representative in the legisl. in 1848 and '49; city solicitor of Cincinnati in 1850; atty.-gen. of the State in 1851; U.S. sen. in 1855–61; d. July 19, 1876.

Pulaski, Count Casimir, a Polish patriot, and a brig.-gen. in the Revol. army, b. Lithuania, Poland, March 4, 1748; d. Oct. 11, 1779. Son of the patriotic Count Pulaski, who formed the confederation of Bar in 1768. He was educated for the law, but had seen some military service under Duke Charles of Courland, when, at the age of 21, he joined his father in the struggle for liberty against King Stanislaus in 1769. The old count was taken prisoner, and perished in a dungeon. His son, elected com.-in-chief in 1770, prolonged the contest, but with insufficient forces. In 1771, he, with 39 others, entered Warsaw, disguised as peasants, for the purpose of seizing the king. They bore him out of the city, but were compelled to leave him not far from the walls, and escape. His little army was soon afterward defeated, himself outlawed, his estates confiscated, and he entered the service of the Turks, then at war with Russia. He afterwards went to Paris; had an interview with Franklin, and, sympathizing deeply with a people struggling for their liberties, came to America in the summer of 1777. He joined the army under Washington; fought with distinction at Brandywine; and was (Sept. 13, 1777) app. by Congress to com. the cavalry, with the rank of brig.-gen. He was in the battle of Germantown; and early in the spring of 1778 was placed in com. of a corps of 68 light horse and 200 foot. This was called "Pulaski's Legion," and was officered mostly by foreigners. Commanding this heterogeneous corps, badly equipped and worse mounted, this brave Pole encountered difficulties and sought danger. Ordered to Little Egg Harbor, he was surprised while on the march, — a deserter having given information to the enemy, — and a large portion of his inf. was bayonetted. In Feb. 1779 he was ordered to the South, and was in active service under Lincoln until the siege of Savannah, in Sept.-Oct. of that year, where he was mortally wounded in the assault, Oct. 9. He was taken to the U.S. brig "Wasp," where he died. Nov. 29, '79, Congress voted a monument to his memory, which was never erected; but one was raised by the citizens of Savannah, of which Lafayette, during his triumphal progress through the U.S., laid the corner-stone. — See Sparks's American Biography, vol. iv. 2d series.

Putnam, ISRAEL, maj.-gen. Revol. army, b. Salem, Ms., 7 Jan. 1718; d. Brooklyn, Ct., 29 May, 1790. He received little education, but was endowed by nature with a powerful frame, great courage, and an enterprising spirit. He m., and in 1739 settled in Pomfret, Ct., where by industry he acquired a good estate. In 1755 he raised and com. a company for the French war. Joining the army near Crown Point, his bravery, activity, and enterprise gained him, in 1757, the rank of maj. While stationed at Ft. Edward, he by personal exertions saved a powder-magazine from fire after it had burned the outer planking. In Aug. 1758, while returning to Fort Edward from a scouting exped., he fell into an ambuscade, was taken, and ab. being burned at the stake, when Molang, a French partisan, rescued him. He was taken to Montreal, where Col. Schuyler relieved his wants, and procured his exchange. He was a lieut.-col. at the siege of Montreal in 1760, and at the capture of Havana in 1762; and in 1764 was a col. in Bradstreet's exped. against the Western Indians. He was afterward an inn-keeper in Brookline, Ct., and a member of the legisl. In 1773, with Gen. Lyman, he went to the Mpi. to explore a grant of military lands, but derived no benefit from them. Hearing of the battle of Lexington, he left his plough where he was using it, unyoked his team, and, clothed as he was, set off for Boston. He returned; raised a regt., with which he marched to Cambridge; was app. a provincial maj.-gen., and also on the continental establishment, 19 June, 1775. At Bunker's Hill he was conspicuous, animating and encouraging the troops. On the evacuation of Boston, he was intrusted with the com. at N.Y. He afterward superintended the fortifications of Phila., and, after Trenton and Princeton, was posted at the latter place, performing great service with a small force. App. in the spring of 1777 to com. a force in the Highlands of N.Y., he made the judicious selection of West Point as the site of a fortress. While posted at Reading, Ct., in 1778, he was attacked by Gen. Tryon, and escaped by plunging down a steep precipice, where the British dragoons dared not follow him. This was his last active service. He was a good executive officer, more brave than prudent, frequently wanting in dignity, but generous and humane. — See Life by David Humphreys.

Putnam, MARY (LOWELL), authoress, dau. of Rev. Charles, b. Boston, Dec. 3, 1810. She was m. Apr. 5, 1832, to Samuel R. Putnam, a merchant of Boston. Review* and to the Christian Examiner.

Putnam, RUFUS, brig.-gen., b. Sutton, Ms., Apr. 9, 1738; d. Marietta, O., May 4, 1824. He quitted the business of a millwright to serve as a common soldier through the campaigns of 1757–60, and, on the surrender of Montreal, m. and settled in New Braintree, Ms., to pursue his original vocation, devoting his leisure to the study of mathematics, and attaining great proficiency in its application to navigation and surveying. In Jan. 1773 he sailed to E. Florida with a committee to explore lands there supposed to have been granted by parliament to the provincial officers and soldiers who had served in the French war, and was app. by the gov. dep.-surveyor of the province. Returning to Ms. he was made a lieut.-col. in David Brewer's regt. The ability displayed by him as an engineer in throwing up defences in Roxbury secured for him the favorable consideration of Washington, who wrote to Congress that the millwright was altogether a more competent officer than any of the French gentlemen to whom it had given

Rale (sometimes erroneously written RÂLE, RALLE, and RASLES), SEBASTIEN, a French missionary to the Indians, b. Franche Comté, 1658; killed at Norridgewock, Me., Aug. 12, 1724. Joining the Jesuits, he for a time taught Greek at the Coll. of Nismes. He came to Quebec in Oct. 1689; was first stationed at the Abenaki Mission of St. Francis, near the falls of the Chaudière, then in the Illinois country; and finally at Norridgewock, on the Kennebec, as early as 1695. Rale accomp. the Indians on all their hunting and fishing excursions, and obtained great influence over the Abenakis. The English accused him of instigating the forrays of the savages upon the settlements along the coast, and set a price upon his head. His church was burned in 1705, and a second exped. (in 1722) pillaged his cabin and the church, which had been rebuilt, carrying off, among other papers, his Dictionary of the Abenaki Language, which is now preserved in the library of Harv. Coll., and has been printed in the Memoirs of the Acad. of Arts and Sciences, with an introd. and notes by John Pickering, 4to, 1833. In 1724 a party from Fort Richmond surprised Norridgewock, killed a number of the Indians, and shot Rale at the foot of the mission cross; 7 chiefs who endeavored to protect him sharing his fate. His body was afterward disgracefully mutilated. A monument was erected to his memory by Bishop Fenwick, 29 Aug. 1833. — See Memoir by C. Francis, D.D., in Sparks's Amer. Biog., 2d series, vol. 7.

Raleigh, SIR WALTER, soldier, statesman, and writer, b. Budleigh, Devon, Eng., 1552; d. 18 Oct. 1618. Educated at Oxford. In 1569–75 he fought for the Huguenots in France; and in 1576–9, under Sir John Norris, in the Low Countries. In 1579 he set out with Sir Humphrey Gilbert, his half-bro., on an exped. to Newfoundland; but it was frustrated by a Spanish fleet. He next served in Ireland. From another exped. to Newfoundland with Gilbert, in 1583, he was forced to return by the breaking-out of a contagious disease on board his ship. Raleigh determined to plant a colony in America, obtained an extensive patent, sent out two ships under Barlow that brought back good cargoes, and sent in 1585 a second exped. under Greenville; but the colony was badly governed, and returned in 1586. Tobacco and potatoes were introduced into Europe by these voyages. Wisely determining to found an agricultural colony, in April, 1587, he sent a large body of emigrants, with their wives and families, to make a settlement in Chesapeake Bay. Granting them a charter, and app. a municipal govt. for the city of Raleigh, he intrusted the administration to John White, with 11 assistants. They founded their city on the site of the old settlement at Roanoke Island, and sent back for re-enforcements. They never came; and 2 of Raleigh's ships were taken by the French. His means were exhausted, and the colonists all perished. Having expended £40,000 in his efforts at colonization, Raleigh in 1589 formed under his patents a company of "Merchants and Adventurers" to continue them. After receiving many marks of royal favor, he in 1589 accomp. the expelled king of Portugal in his attempt to re-instate himself, but rendered himself obnoxious by taking bribes for the exertion of his influence. In Feb. 1595 he made an exped. to Guiana, and reached the great River Orinoco. In 1596 he had a naval command under Essex in the attack on Cadiz, but became his enemy, and promoted his downfall and execution. He was deprived of his posts by James I., and, upon suspicion of being implicated in a conspiracy to place Arabella Stuart upon the throne, was declared guilty of high treason, and was 12 years confined in the Tower, during which period he composed his "History of the World." To retrieve his fortunes, he undertook a settlement in Guiana, but, having attacked the Spanish settlement of St. Thomas, offended King James, who was then seeking the hand of the infanta for his son Charles, and who, upon his return, caused his arrest and trial, which resulted in sentence of death, and his speedy execution.

Rall, or Rahl, JOHAN GOTTLIEB, a Hessian col. killed at the battle of Trenton, Dec. 26, 1776. He had seen service in the seven-years' war, and with his regt. (de Rati) formed part of the contingent hired of the elector of Hesse Cassel by George III., and landed at Staten Island in June, 1776. He took part in the battle of White Plains, in the capture of Fort Washington, where he was particularly disting., and, after the Americans evacuated N. J., was placed in com. of an advanced post at Trenton. Here he was surprised and slain on the morning after Christmas.

Edmund became eminent as a lawyer; was a warm friend of the Revol.; Aug. 15, 1775, became aide to Washington; was the delegate of Williamsburg to the conv. of May, 1776; became atty.-gen. of the State in July; delegate to Congress in 1779–82; gov. of Va. 1786–8; member of the conv. that formed the Federal Const., and introduced what was called the "Va. Plan;" voted against the instrument, but in the Va. conv. urged its acceptance; U.S. atty.-gen. 1789–90; U.S. sec. of state 1794–Aug. 1795, having lost the confidence of the administration in consequence of an intrigue with the French minister. He was disinherited by his father for refusing to adhere to the royal cause. His person, mode of speaking, and the cast of his eloquence, are described by Wirt in his "British Spy." He m. the dau. of R. C. Nicholas. Author of "A Vindication" of his resignation, 8vo, 1795.

Randolph, Edward, an agent sent from Great Britain to ascertain the condition of the N. Eng. Colonies, and who gave them great trouble by his hostility to their interests; came to Boston in 1676, and was the principal means of depriving Ms. of her charter. He was a member of the council during the govt. of Andros, and in 1689 was imprisoned with him as a traitor. Subsequently released, he went to the West Indies, where he died.

Randolph, George Wythe, politician, b. Edge Hill, Va., ab. 1802; d. Albemarle Co., Va., Apr. 4, 1867. Son of Gov. Thos. M. He was a grandson of Jefferson. Entered the navy at the age of 13; attained a lieutenancy, which he resigned; began to practise law at Charlottesville in 1845, and at Richmond in 1850. He was considered a leader in the secession war in Va.; was a major at Bethel, and for gallantry there was made a brig.-gen.; sec. of war for the Confed. Mar. 17–Nov. 17, 1862. Resuming the practice of law, he in Dec. 1863 went to France as agent for the Confed. treas. dept., and returned home in Sept. 1865 with shattered health. His bro., T. J. Randolph, edited the Jefferson Papers.

Randolph, Jacob, M.D. (U. of Pa. 1817), physician, b. Phila. Nov. 25, 1796; d. there Feb. 29, 1848. His ancestor Edward Fitz Randolph emig. to N.E. in 1630, and afterward settled in N. J. His father, of the same name, was an officer of the 4th Pa. Regt. in the Revol. war. Jacob began practice in Phila.; m. the eldest dau. of Dr. Physick in 1822; and soon attained eminence as a surgeon. Surgeon to the almshouse in 1830; a surgeon of the Pa. Hospital from 1835 to his death; and in 1847, after having been some time lecturer upon clinical surgery in the Pa. U., was made prof. of that branch. He pub. a Memoir of Dr. Physick in 1839, and contrib. many valuable papers to medical journals. Member of the American Philos. Soc. and of the Coll. of Surgeons, and a consulting surgeon to the Phila. Dispensary. — Gross's Amer. Med. Biog.

Randolph, John, of Roanoke, orator, b. Cawsons, Chesterfield Co., Va., 2 June, 1773; d. Phila. 24 May, 1833. John his father was the son of Col. Richard of Curles, who m. Jane Bolling, gr.-granddau. of Pocahontas, and who was treas. of the Colony. His father d. in 1775, and in the autumn of 1778 his mother m. St. George Tucker. In 1784 he was sent to Bermuda for his health, which was much improved there; and he passed his time in reading the best English authors. In 1787 he studied at N. J. Coll., and in 1788–90 at Col. Coll., N. Y. In 1799 he entered Congress from the Charlotte Dist., which he represented till 1829 with the exception of 4 years, holding in 1825–7 a seat in the U.S. senate. He was a Democ., a partisan of State rights, and a political friend of Jefferson. About the end of 1804 he was app. chief manager of the impeachment trial of Judge Chase; became estranged from Jefferson about 1806; separated from his political associates; tried to defeat the election of Madison; opposed the embargo and the war of 1812, and was, in consequence, defeated in the election of 1813. He opposed the recharter of the U.S. Bank in 1816, and the Mo. Compromise Bill of 1820, because it prohibited the extension of slavery, at the same time stigmatizing the Northern men who voted for it as "doughfaces." One of his most marked efforts was his speech in 1822 against a resolution of sympathy for the Greeks, then struggling for independence. In 1826, after the app. by Pres. Adams of Mr. Clay as sec. of state, he insulted Clay in a speech, alluding to the affair as a "combination of the Puritan with the blackleg." His apologist Garland admits that "he indulged in language of the grossest personal insult." In the duel that ensued, Randolph's pistol went off before the word: Clay fired without effect, and his adversary then threw away his fire. He supported Jackson for the presidency in 1828, and in 1830–1 was minister to Russia, returning home in feeble health. He sympathized with the nullifiers of S.C. He died as he was about taking passage for Europe. By his will he manumitted his 300 slaves, making provision for their support. He was never married. He was a man of genius, of ready wit, and a master of sarcasm and invective. "He was like an Ishmaelite," says Garland; "his hand against every man, and every man's

Rapp, GEORGE, the founder of the Harmony Society, Economy, Pa., b. Wurtemberg in 1770; d. Aug. 9, 1847. In his youth he believed that he had experienced a divine call, and that he was charged with the restoration of the Christian religion to its original purity. He did not long confine himself to spiritual matters, but formed the plan of a community organized on the model of the primitive church, with goods in common. Being hindered in this project by the State, he emig. to Amer. in 1803 with a band of followers of his own peculiar religious, social, and political views. They first settled in Butler Co. in 1805; from there they removed in 1815 to the Wabash, and built the village of New Harmony, which was purchased in 1824 by Robert Owen; and Rapp and his followers established themselves at Economy, Pa. They own 3,500 acres of land, and carry on the manuf. of wool, cotton, silk, and flour.

Rarey, JOHN S., horse-tamer, b. Franklin Co., O., 1828; d. Cleveland, O., Oct. 4, 1866. At an early age he displayed tact in the management of horses, and by degrees worked out his own system, gaining profit and celebrity. In 1856 he went to Texas, and on his return to O. began to give public exhibitions, which he extended to Europe. One of his greatest triumphs was in Eng. over the racing colt "Cruiser," which was so vicious that he had killed one or two grooms, but was completely tamed and brought to America by Mr. Rarey. In 1863 he was employed by govt. to inspect and report on the horses of the Potomac Army. Author of a treatise on Horse-Taming, repub. in Eng. in 1858.

Rawlings, COL. MOSES, Revol. officer; d. Hampshire Co., Va., May, 1809. He com. a Md. rifle regt. at Fort Washington, and, after a brave resistance, was captured on the fall of that fort, 16 Nov. 1776.

Rawlins, GEN. JOHN A., b. Guilford, Ill., Feb. 13, 1831; d. Washington, Sept. 6, 1869. He was a farmer and charcoal-burner until 1854, but improved every opportunity for reading and study. He studied law at Galena; was adm. to the bar in 1855, and practised successfully until the war began. Though a decided Democrat, and opposed to the war, yet, when Sumter fell, he gave his support to the Govt., and Sept. 15 went on the staff of Gen. Grant as assistant adj.-gen. (rank of capt.). Brig.-gen. Aug. 11, 1863; brev. maj.-gen. Feb. 24, 1865; chief of staff to the lieut.-gen. March 5, 1865 (rank of brig.-gen.); and maj.-gen. March 13, 1865. He remained upon the staff of his chief through all the trying scenes of the war until the victory was won; and was sec. of war from March 11, 1869, until a few days before his death.

Rawson, EDWARD, Secretary of Ms. 1650–86, b. Gillingham, Dorset, Eng., April 16, 1615; d. Boston, Aug. 27, 1693. He was connected by marriage with the two great divines of N.E., Hooker and Wilson, and settled in Newbury ab. 1636. He represented that town in the Gen. Court several years. He is believed to have been one of the authors of a small book, pub. in 1691, entitled "The Revolution in N. England Justified," &c., signed by "E.R." and "S.S." Author of "The General Laws and Liberties concerning the Inhabitants of the Ms.," &c., fol. 1660. A Memoir, with Genealogical Notices of his Descendants, by Sullivan S. Rawson, was pub. 8vo, 1849. His son GRINDALL, minister of Mendon (1680–1715, H. U. 1678, d. Feb. 6, 1715, a. 56), preached to the Indians in their own tongue, and was a talented and benevolent man. He pub. Ray, JOSEPH, M. D., physician and instructor, b. Va. Nov. 25, 1807; d. Cincinnati, April 17, 1855. Self-educated, he became at the age of 16 a schoolmaster; subsequently studied at Wash. Coll., Pa., at Athens Coll., O., and at the Ohio Med. College, whence he graduated, and became a surgeon in the Cincinnati Hospital. In 1834 Dr. Ray was app. prof. of mathematics in Woodward Coll.; and, on its re-organization in 1851 as a high school, he became its principal. During the last five or six years of his life, he was pres. of the board of directors of the House of Refuge in the same city. Author of several standard text-books of arithmetic and algebra.

Ray, WILLIAM, poet, b. Salisbury, Ct., Dec. 8, 1771; d. Auburn, N.Y., 1827. With but little education, he tried teaching, and, engaging in trade, became a bankrupt. He then joined the frigate "Philadelphia" in 1803, and was made a prisoner off the harbor of Tripoli by the Turks when that vessel ran aground, Oct. 31, and detained for more than a year and a half. During the war of 1812 he was a brigade major at Plattsburg, and finally settled at Onondaga. In 1808 he published "Horrors of Slavery, or the American Tars in Tripoli;" and in 1821 he pub. a vol. of poems containing also a brief narrative of his sufferings in Tripoli. — Litchfield Biog.

Raymond, HENRY JARVIS, LL.D. (Un. Coll.), journalist and politician, founder of the N.Y. Times, b. Lima, N.Y., Jan. 24, 1820; d. New York, June 18, 1869. U. of Vt. 1840. His youth was passed on his father's farm. He studied law in N.Y., maintaining himself by teaching and by contributions to the New-Yorker, a literary journal. On the establishment of the Tribune in Apr. 1841, he became assistant editor, and gained extraordinary distinction as a reporter. He made a specialty of lectures speeches, and sermons; and reported Dr. Lardner's lectures so correctly, that the lecturer consented to their publication, with very slight alterations, in two octavo vols., with his certificate of their accuracy. He was on the staff of the Courier and Enquirer from 1848 to 1851, and in 1847 formed a literary connection with the publishers Harper and Bros., which continued 10 years. During this period he carried on with Horace Greeley a controversy upon Socialism, afterward pub. in a pamphlet. In 1849 he was elected to the State legisl. by the Whigs; re-elected in 1850, he was chosen speaker, and manifested special interest in the school system and the canal policy of the State. After the adjournment he sailed for Europe for his health, and soon after his return pub. (Sept. 18, 1851) the first number of the N.Y. Times. At the Whig nat. conv. at Baltimore in 1852, he made a long speech in exposition of Northern sentiment. In 1854 he was elected lieut.-gov. of the State by a large majority. He was active in organizing the Republican party, and drew up the "Address to the People" promulgated at the nat. conv. at Pittsburg in Feb. 1856, and spoke frequently in the following pres. canvass for Fremont. He also took a prominent part in the pres. canvass of 1860 for Mr. Lincoln, and warmly supported the war against the seceding States. Elected to Congress in 1864, he sustained the reconstruction policy of Mr. Johnson. Author of "A History of the Administration of President Lincoln," 1864; "A Life of Pres. Lincoln," 1865; and "Life of Daniel Webster," 2 vols. 12mo, 1853. As a journalist, he had no superior in the country.

Raynal, William Thomas Francis, a French political writer, b. St. Geniez, 1711; d. Passy, Mar. 6, 1796. He became at an early age a Jesuit, but quitted them in 1748, and went to Paris, where he disting. himself as a writer. Embarking in commercial pursuits, he was led to compose his "Histoire Philosophique et Politique des Établissemens et du Commerce des Européens dans les deux Indes," first pub. in 1770, of which a greatly improved edition was pub. in 10 vols. some years later. Its freedom of opinion, and boldness of remark upon authority of every description, caused the parliament of Paris to order it to be burnt, and its author to be arrested. In 1781 he pub. his "Tableau et Révolutions des Colonies Anglaises dans l'Amérique Sept.," 2 vols. 12mo. Its blunders were at once pointed out in a pamphlet by Thomas Paine. In 1790 the National Assembly cancelled the decree passed against him, and in 1791 he addressed a letter to the Constituent Assembly in defence of the rights of property. He escaped the tyranny of Robespierre, but was stripped of his property, and died in indigence.

Red Jacket (SAGOYEWATHA), chief of the Senecas, and a celebrated orator, b. 1751, near Buffalo, N.Y.; d. there Jan. 20, 1830. During the Revol. the Senecas fought under the Brit. standard; and his activity and intelligence attracted the notice of the officers. At a council held at Fort Stanwix in 1784 to negotiate a treaty between the U.S. and some of the Six Nations for the cession of lands, he spoke very eloquently against the treaty, which was, nevertheless, ratified. A few years later, Red Jacket had an interview with Washington, who gave him a silver medal, which he wore ever afterward. In 1810 he gave information to the Indian agent of the attempt made by Tecumseh to draw the Senecas into the Western combination. He possessed talents of the highest order, and was a thorough Indian in his costume, as well as in his contempt for the dress, language, and every thing else belonging to the English. He was second to none in the authority of his tribe, and maintained his position with great dignity. He excelled as an orator, using beautiful and figurative language, conjoined with easy, graceful, and impressive gesticulations. In the war of 1812 he fought for the U. S. with the utmost intrepidity; and the bravery of Red Jacket was particularly conspicuous in an action near Lake George, Aug. 13, 1812. In his later years he was a confirmed drunkard. — See Life by W. L. Stone, 8vo, 1841.

Redman, JOHN, M.D., an eminent physician, b. Phila. Feb. 27, 1722; d. there Mar. 19, 1808. He studied at the Rev. Ribault (ré-bó), Jean, a French navigator, who led the first colony to Florida, b. Dieppe ab. 1520; killed in Fla. 1565. Admiral Coligny, having determined to found a Huguenot colony in Amer., fitted out two vessels for an exped. to Fla., giving the com. to Ribault, who sailed from Havre de Grace, Feb. 18, 1562, and early in May anchored in Port-Royal harbor. A fort was built south of the present site of Beaufort, and named Caroline, in honor of the king of France; and 26 colonists were left in possession, who, when reduced to the point of starvation, set sail in a crazy bark, and were picked up by an English ship. An expedition under Laudonnière sailed in April, 1564, and on the River May, now called the St. John's, built a fort, also called Caroline. After great suffering, they were on the point of returning to France, when Ribault, who left Dieppe May 22, 1565, arrived with a fleet of 7 vessels. Scarcely had he anchored, when a Spanish fleet, under Menendez, appeared, with orders from the king to "gibbet and behead all the Protestants in those regions." The French fleet, unprepared for battle, cut its cables, and escaped. The Spaniards repaired to St. Augustine, where Ribault, against the advice of his officers, determined to attack them. A terrible storm wrecked his vessels on the coast of Fla., near Cape Canaveral, ab. 100 miles S. of St. Augustine. In the mean time, Menendez surprised the garrison of Fort Caroline, and massacred near 200 of both sexes. Ignorant of their fate, Ribault endeavored to reach the fort, but fell into the hands of Menendez, and, with nearly all his party, was massacred. A French exped. under De Gourgue, in 1567, in retaliation, seized two forts near the St. John's, and the important fort of St. Mateo, and hanged all their prisoners on the same tree upon which his countrymen had been executed by Menendez. A vol. of 42 pages, now extremely rare, being an Eng. translation of the report of his first voyage, made by Ribault to Coligny, was pub. in London under the title of "The Whole and True Discovervye of Terra Florida, &c.; written in French by Capt. Ribauld, the first that whollye discovered the same, and now newly set forthe in Englishe the XXX. of May, 1563."

6 years old. In addition to his academical studies, he devoted some time to medicine; commenced school-keeping at the age of 21 in Fredericksburg; removed to Richmond in 1803; and in 1804 became editor of a Democratic newspaper, subsequently called the Richmond Enquirer. Of this paper he was the editor and proprietor forty years, exercising an influence, which, considering its duration, was unequalled by that of any other publication in the Union. In 1845 he relinquished the Enquirer to his two sons, having consented, at the solicitation of Pres. Polk, to assume the editorial control of the organ of his administration, — a new paper called the Union, from which he retired in 1849. THOMAS, his son, editor of the Enquirer, d. May 21, 1854.

Rittenhouse, DAVID, LL.D. (U. of Pa. 1782), F.R.S. (1795), mathematician and astronomer, b. near Germantown, Pa., Apr. 8, 1732; d. Phila. June 26, 1796. His great-grandfather, a Hollander, established at Germantown ab. 1690 the first paper-mill in Amer. While working on his father's farm at Norriton, he came into possession of the tools and mathematical books of a deceased uncle, and thoroughly mastered Newton's "Principia." Before he was 19, he discovered the method of fluxions, and for some time supposed it was original with himself. He made a clock before he was 17 without instruction, and in 1751 applied himself to that art, which he followed for some years, attracting public attention by his skill and knowledge. At 23 he planned and executed an orrery, which was purchased by Princeton Coll. A second and larger one was afterward constructed by him for the U. of Pa. In 1763 he was employed to determine the initial and most difficult portion of the boundary-line since known as Mason and Dixon's, which he did accurately with instruments of his own construction. He afterward fixed the boundaries between N.Y., N. J., and Pa., and several other States. App. by the Amer. Philos. Society to observe the transit of Venus, June 3, 1769, he was completely successful; though, at the moment of apparent contact, his emotion was so great, that he fainted. His account was pub. in the "Transactions" of the society. In 1770 he removed to Phila., where he continued his clock and mathematical-instrument making with high reputation. In 1777–89 he was treasurer of Pa.; succeeded Franklin as pres. of the Philos. Soc. in 1791; was director of the U.S. mint in 1792–5; member of the Acad. of Arts and Sciences at Boston. A number of his pieces are to be found in the first four vols. of the "Trans." of the Philos. Soc.; and an "Address" delivered before this body in 1775, upon the history of astronomy, was pub. by him. A Life of Rittenhouse was pub. in 1813 by his relative William Barton; and another, by Prof. James Renwick, is in Sparks's "Amer. Biog."

In 1760 he came to Amer., opened a shop in Phila., but in 1761 established himself in New York, where, April 22, 1773, he began to publish the New-York Gazetteer. "His ever open and uninfluenced press" advocated the cause of the English govt. with great zeal, and severely attacked the patriots. In May, 1775, he seems to have been placed in confinement by order of Congress, to which body he addressed a remonstrance, in which he solemnly declares, "that, however wrong and mistaken he may have been in his opinions, he has always meant honestly and openly to do his duty as a servant of the public." Nov. 1775, in consequence of his constant attacks upon the patriots, Capt. Isaac Sears, with a troop of horse, destroyed his press and other apparatus, and, carrying off the types, converted them into bullets. Rivington then went to Eng.; was app. king's printer in N.Y.; returned with a new press after the city had fallen into the hands of the British; and, in Oct. 1777, resumed the publication of his paper, the title of which he soon changed to Rivington's N.Y. Loyal Gazette, and, on Dec. 13, to the Royal Gazette. In 1781, when British success looked very doubtful, he turned spy, furnishing Washington with important information; and, when New York was evacuated, Rivington remained in the city. He changed the title of his paper to Rivington's N.Y. Gazette and Universal Advertiser. His business, however, declined; his paper was stopped in 1783; and he passed the rest of his life in comparative poverty. He possessed much talent, fine manners, and was well informed. Robinson, Col. Beverley, loyalist, b. Va. 1723; d. Thornbury, Eng., 1792. Son of John, pres. of the council of Va. in 1734, and afterwards speaker of the house of burgesses. Was a major under Wolfe at the storming of Quebec in 1759, and became very wealthy by his marriage with the dau. of Frederick Phillipse, the owner of an immense landed estate on the Hudson. Though opposed to the measures which led to the separation of the Colonies from the mother-country, he took sides with the loyalists when independence was declared. He removed to N. York, and raised the Loyal American Regt., of which he was col. He was concerned in the treason of Arnold; and his country-mansion was the headquarters of the latter while arranging his nefarious project. At the conclusion of the war, he went to Eng- with a portion of his family. His son Beverley (Col. Coll. 1773, and a lieut.-col. British army) settled near St. John, N.B., was a member of the council, and d. New York in 1816. This family was one of the largest losers by its loyalty.

Robinson, Edward, D.D. (D.C. 1831, U. of Halle 1842), LL.D. (Y.C. 1844), biblical scholar, b. Southington, Ct., Apr. 10, 1794; d. New York, Jan. 27, 1863. Ham. Coll. 1816; tutor there 1817. Married a dau. of S. Kirkland the missionary, who died in 1819. Continuing his studies at Clinton till 1821, he went to Andover to pub. the first 6 books of the "Iliad," which he had edited; studied Hebrew; assisted Prof. Stuart in his literary labors; and was app. an assist. instructor there. From 1826 to 1830 he travelled and studied in Europe, where he married Thérèse, dau. of Prof. Jakob of Halle. He was prof. extraordinary of sacred literature, and librarian at Andover in 1830–3; and from 1837 till his death was prof. of bibl. lit. in the Un. Theol. Sem. in N.Y. City. In 1838 he visited Palestine, of which he, with Rev. Eli Smith, made a minute and careful survey. His "Biblical Researches in Palestine" were pub. in Halle, Lond., and Boston, in 1841. The results of a second visit in 1852 were pub. in 1856, with a revision of his previous researches. During the latter part of his life, he was engaged upon a physical and historical geography of the Holy Land. He visited Germany in the summer of 1862 for surgical treatment of his eyes, being threatened with loss of sight. He was an active and efficient member of the geographical, oriental, and ethnological societies. His other works are a translation of "Buttman's Greek Grammar," 1832 and 1850; a "Greek and English Lexicon of the New Testament," 1836 and 1850; "The Harmony of the Four Gospels," in Greek, 1845, and in English, 1846. From 1831 to 1834 he edited the Biblical Repository, which, when united with the "Bibliotheca Sacra," he established and edited one year in N. York. He has also edited Calmet's "Biblical Dict.," and a translation of Gesenius's "Hebrew Lexicon." In 1859 he pub. a Memoir of his father, Rev. Wm. Robinson, with some account of his ancestors. — See his Life by H. B. Smith, D.D., and R. D. Hitchcock, D.D., 12mo, 1863.

passage of the Nive. At the termination of the Peninsular war he went to Canada as com. in chief of the forces; in the war of 1812–15 he had the com. of two brigades intended for the attack of the works at Plattsburg on Lake Champlain, Sept. 1814; and from July 1, 1815, until 1816, was gov. of Upper Canada; in 1815 he received the order of knighthood, and in 1838 was advanced to that of the grand cross; he attained the full rank of gen. in 1841.

Robinson, HORATIO N., LL.D., author of mathematical text-books, b. Hartwick, N.Y., Jan. 1, 1806; d. Elbridge, N.Y., Jan. 19, 1867. He had an ordinary education, but at the age of 16 made the calculations for an almanac, which attracted the attention of a wealthy gentleman in the vicinity, who sent him to N. J. Coll. App. a prof. of mathematics in the navy at 19, he filled that post for 10 years acceptably. He took charge of an acad. at Canandaigua in 1835, and afterward of one at Genesee. Impaired health led him to remove in 1844 to Cincinnati, where he produced his "University Algebra," — a work of much originality, the great success of which encouraged him to prepare several other works. He removed to Syracuse, N.Y., in 1850, and in 1854 to Elbridge. Some of the best practical talent of the country was employed to assist him in completing his series by adding a full course of elementary text-books, numbering 22. The merit of these text-books is attested by their very large and increasing circulation, and the testimony of the best educators of the country. His latest work, "Differential and Integral Calculus," 1861, was in 1868 edited by I. F. Quinby. — Allibone.

Robinson, GEN. JAMES S., b. near Mansfield, O., Oct. 14, 1828. Entering the 4th Ohio, he participated in the Rich-Mountain campaign, June, 1861; maj. 82d O. Oct. 26, 1861; lieut.-col. Apr. 1862; served in the Shenandoah under Fremont; at the second Bull Run; col. Dec. 12, 1864; brig.-gen. Jan. 12, 1865; brev. maj.-gen. Mar. 13, 1865. — Reid's Ohio in the War.

Robinson, JOHN, an English dissenting clergyman, b. 1575; d. Leyden, March 1, 1625. Educated at Cambridge, and for a time held a benefice near Yarmouth in Norfolk, but became pastor of a dissenting cong. in the north of England in 1602. "Beset by the agents of the prelacy," its members (in 1607) attempted to leave for Holland, but were prevented, and kept under arrest for a month; in 1608 they removed to Amsterdam, and ab. 1609, by advice of Robinson, they removed to Leyden. Here they became by arrivals from Eng. a great congregation. Here Robinson accepted the challenge of Episcopius, the successor of Arminius, and defender of his doctrines. A public disputation was held in the presence of a large assembly; and the friends of the former assert that "the Truth had a famous victory." In 1617 Robinson entered heartily into the plan of forming a settlement in America. A minority of his congregation, under Brewster, set out July 22, 1620; but Robinson, whose intention it was to follow with the remainder, d. before the consent of the association of English merchants who controlled the enterprise could be obtained. The rest of his church emig. soon after his death. His son Isaac came here as early as 1630. A complete ed. of his writings was pub. at Boston in 1851, in 3 vols., with Memoir and Annotations by Robert Ashton. — See Geneal. Reg., April, 1866.

taken against the colonists. He foresaw the evil consequences which must proceed from coercion, and he reprobated taxation without representation. By the death of his uncle, the Archbishop of Armagh, in Oct. 1794, he acquired the title of Lord Rokeby. His eccentricity was such as to excite much curiosity. He wore his beard reaching nearly to the mid-of his body: his manners, and habits of life, approached to primitive simplicity. He was disting. for his ardent love of freedom; was inimical to measures which in his opinion encroached on the liberties of mankind, and ceased not to lift up his voice against every species of oppression. Author of "Considerations on the Measures with respect to the British Colonies," 1774; "Considerations," &c., 1775; "Further Examination of American Measures," 1776; "Peace the Best Policy," 1777.

In the battle of Antietam, while leading his brigade to a charge upon the enemy's guns, he was mortally wounded by a cannon-ball in the terrible conflict by which the stone bridge was carried and held.

Rodney, CÆSAR, signer of the Decl. of Indep., b. Dover, Del., ab. 1730; d. early in 1783. His father William came over with Penn, and, after a short residence in Phila., settled in Kent Co., Del., leaving to his eldest son a large landed estate. At the age of 28 Cæsar was app. high sheriff, and, at the end of his term of service, was created a justice of the peace and a judge of the lower courts. As early as 1762 he represented his county in the legisl., by which, in 1765, he was sent to the Stamp-act Congress at N.Y; in 1769 he was elected speaker of the house, continuing to occupy that chair for several years; was app. chairman of the com. of corresp. with the other Colonies; and in 1774 was a delegate to the Gen. Congress; in the following year he was re-elected, and also made a brig.-gen. When the question of independence was before Congress, Rodney was on a tour through the southern part of Del., quieting the minds of the people, and preparing them for a change of govt. His colleagues McKean and Read being divided upon the question, the former, who knew him to be favorable to the declaration, urged him by express to hasten his return. He did so, and by great exertion arrived just in season for the final discussion; and, by his affirmative vote, he secured that union among the Colonies, so important to the cause of independence. The opposition of the royalists, who abounded in the lower counties, prevented his re-election the succeeding year; but, as a member of the councils of safety and inspection, he displayed great activity in collecting supplies for the troops of the State then with Washington in N.J. He repaired in person to the camp near Princeton in 1777, where for nearly two months he was engaged in laborious services, and, commanding the Del. line, was brig.-gen. In the autumn of the same year he was again chosen to Congress, but, before taking his seat, was chosen pres. of his State, in which station he remained 4 years (1778–82). His nephew CÆSAR A. (M.C. 1803–5 and 1819–21, U.S. atty.-gen. 1807–11, U.S. senator 1821–3, minister to Buenos Ayres 1823, until his death, June 10, 1824) pub. with J. Rosas, Don Juan Manuel Ortiz de, dictator of the Arg. Repub., b. Buenos Ayres 1793. Son of a wealthy land-owner, he lived with the guachos of the pampas, and imbibed the sanguinary tastes which afterward developed into frightful cruelty. In 1829 Gov. Dorrego app. Rosas, his intimate friend, to the com. of the rural districts, but was soon compelled to surrender to Rosas, who thenceforth, for 23 years, ruled despotically the Argentine Confederation. He reduced the hostile Indian tribes of the interior, and succeeded in uniting the whole of the Plata-river States into the Argentine Confed. in 1835. He often repeated the ill-disguised farce of sending his resignation to the chamber of representatives, when every one knew that whoever advocated its acceptance would be assassinated in 24 hours, as was Maza, pres. of that body. He exhibited energy and constancy in resisting the conditions which Eng. and France sought to impose upon him. Among his arbitrary acts was his attempt to impose upon the indep. repub. of Uruguay a gov. whose term had expired. This act, and his impolitic conduct toward Brazil, with which empire he maintained hostilities for 5 years, hastened his downfall. Feb. 3, 1852, his forces having been destroyed at Monte Casero, 6 leagues from Buenos Ayres, Rosas fled to Eng. with his family; d. near Southampton, Eng., Mar. 14, 1877.

Ross, John (Kooweskoowe), a Cherokee chief, b. Ga. ab. 1790; d. Washington, D.C., Aug. 1, 1866. He was a half-breed, and at an early age had acquired a good English education. He became principal chief of the Cherokees in 1828. The proceedings of the Ga. legisl. for their removal, in 1829, led to an appeal on the part of the Cherokees, Ross acting as their agent, to the U.S. Sup. Court, which resulted in a decision in their favor. Georgia, however, refused to obey, and aggressions upon the Indians increased. In 1835 a treaty was concluded between J. F. Schermerhorn, an agent of the U.S., and Major Ridge; his son John Ridge, and about 600 other Cherokees, agreeing to surrender their lands, and remove West within 2 years. Against this treaty, known as that of New Echota, Ross and over 15,000 of his tribe protested. The govt., however, sent a force under Gen. Scott to compel its fulfilment; and the Indians, with Ross at their head, removed to their new home, a moderate allowance being made them for their losses by the govt. In 1861, Ross, after some hesitation, entered into a treaty with the seceding States. At the time of his death, he was urging the claims of his tribe for losses during the war. He pub. "Letter to a Gentleman of Phila.," 1836.

Ruggles, TIMOTHY, lawyer, politician, and loyalist, b. Rochester, Ms., 11 Oct. 1711; d. Wilmot, N. S., 4 Aug. 1795. H.U. 1732. Son of Rev. Timo., min. of Rochester 1710–68. He practised law successfully at Sandwich, and then at Hardwick; was a member of the legisl. in 1736; and at the battle of Lake George in 1755 was a brig.-gen., and second in com. App. judge of C.C.P. in 1756, and was chief justice from 1762 until the Revol.; speaker of the Assembly in 1762–3; many years an influential member of that body; delegate to the Stamp-act Congress at N.Y. in 1765, and its pres., but refused to concur in its measures, and was reprimanded by the legisl. Adhering to the royal cause, he took refuge in Boston, where, in 1775, he endeavored, without success, to raise a corps of loyalists, and on the departure of the British troops accomp. them to Nova Scotia, and became one of the proprietors of the town of Digby. A wit, scholar, lawyer, he was rude in speech and manner, but was an impressive pleader and an able debater. In Mrs. Warren's dramatic piece, "The Group," he figures as Brigadier Hateall. — See Ward's Life of Curwen; Sabine's Loyalists.

Rumford, SIR BENJAMIN THOMPSON, count, physicist and statesman, b. Woburn, Ms., March 26, 1753; d. Auteuil, France, Aug. 21, 1814. His emig. ancestor James came to N.E. ab. 1630, and settled in Charlestown, Ms. Receiving a common-school education, he entered a counting-house in Salem at the age of 13, and while thus engaged, and also in school-teaching, employed much of his leisure in investigating medicine and physics, attending the lectures of Prof. Winthrop of H.U. He was a clerk in a store in Boston at the time of the massacre in March, 1770. He next taught an acad. in Rumford, now Concord, N.H., and in 1772 m. Mrs. Rolfe, a wealthy widow of that place, and was made major of militia. This app. gave umbrage to older officers over whose heads he was placed, and was the origin of the persecution which afterward drove him into the British camp. He shared in the feelings of his countrymen, although not one of the intense patriots of the day, and tried in vain to obtain a commission in the Cont. army. He was charged with disaffection, driven from his home, and afterwards from his step-father's residence in Woburn. He had a public hearing at Woburn, and, though not condemned, was not fully acquitted. Oct. 10, 1775, he left the Amer. lines, and after the fall of Boston was sent to Eng. by Gen. Howe with despatches. Employed by Lord Geo. Germaine, sec. of state for the Colonies, he became in 1780 under-sec.; on the retirement of Germaine, he returned to America, raised in N.Y. "The King's American Dragoons," and was comissioned lieut.-col.; Feb. 24, 1782, he succeeded, in the absence of Marion, in surprising his brigade, then under Col. Horry, dispersing it, and destroying its stores. Returning to Eng. at the close of the war, he was knighted, and in 1784 entered the service of the Elector of Bavaria as aide-de-camp and chamberlain. Here he re-organized the military service, suppressed beggary, and introduced numerous reforms; among others was the conversion of an old hunting-ground near Munich into a park, where, after his departure, the inhabitants erected a monument in his honor. For his services he was made a State councillor, lieut.-gen., minister of war, and count, taking the title of Rumford, his old residence. His health becoming feeble, he made a tour in Italy; went to Eng. in Sept. 1795, where he was robbed of all his private papers, and original notes and observations on philosophical subjects. He pub. the record of his labors in Bavaria in a series of essays. He discovered the leading principles upon which fireplaces and grates for coal are constructed, and many other economies in the production and employment of heat, which he demonstrated to be only a mode of motion, — one of the great discoveries of the age. Returning to Bavaria in 1796, he was app. head of the council of regency during the absence of the elector, and maintained the neutrality of Munich during the war between France and Austria, and was made supt. of the gen. police. At the end of two years, his health failing, he fixed his residence in Eng., where he founded the Roy. Institution; in 1802 he fixed his residence in Paris; and in 1804 m. the widow of Lavoisier, but they soon separated. He passed the rest of his life in philosophical and chemical experiments. He contrib. a large number of papers to scientific journals; made discoveries in the strength of materials and the force of gunpowder, in light, heat, and illumination; instituted prizes for discoveries in light and heat for the Roy. Soc. of Lond. and the Amer. Acad. of Sciences, of which he himself received the first on the former subject from the Roy. Soc.; and he bequeathed to H. U. the funds by which was founded its professorship of the application of science to the art of living in 1816. He left by his first wife a dau., who bore the title of countess, and who resided in Concord, where she d. in 1852. Mad. Lavoisier d. Paris, Feb. 10, 1836, a. 81. His essays were pub. 3 vols. 8vo, 1796; Philosophical Papers, 8vo, 1802. His Life by Rev. Geo. E. Ellis, D.D., to accomp. a complete edition of his works, to be issued in 4 vols. 8vo, was pub. 8vo, Boston, 1871.

Rumsey, JAMES, inventor, b. Bohemia Manor, Cecil Co., Md., 1743; d. London 23 Dec. 1792. In Sept. 1784 he exhibited on the Potomac a boat which was propelled against the stream by machinery. Washington witnessed and certified to the fact. In Mar. 1786 he propelled a boat on the Potomac by a steam-engine and machinery of his own making, and obtained a patent in Va. in 1787. In 1788 the Rumsey Society, of which Franklin was a member, was formed in Phila. to aid him. He went to London, where a similar body was formed, a boat and machinery built for him; and he obtained patents in Great Britain, France, and Holland. A successful experiment was made on the Thames in Dec. 1792; and he was preparing another when his death occurred. In 1839 the Ky. legisl. presented a gold medal to his son, "commemorative of his father's services and high agency in giving to the world the benefit of the steamboat." He pub. a "Short Treatise on the Application of Steam," 1788. He made important improvements in mill-machinery about 1784.

Runkle, JOHN DANIEL, Ph.D. (Ham. Col. 1870), LL.D. (Wesl. U. 1871), physicist, b. Root, Montg. Co., N.Y., 11 Oct. 1822. Law. Sci. School, Camb., 1851. He worked on his father's farm until 21, then studied and taught until he entered the Sci. School in 1848. App. in 1849 assist. in the prep. of the "American Ephemeris and Naut. Almanac," with which he is still connected. In 1856 he pub. in the "Smithsonian Contribs." "New Tables for determining the Values of the Co-efficients in the Perturbative Function of Planetary Motion," &c.; and founded the Mathem. Monthly, of which 3 vols. were issued (1859–61). Elected in 1865 prof. of mathematics and analytic mechanics in the Ms. Institute of Technology, acting-pres. in 1868, and pres. in 1870.

surgeon of the Pacific squadron; retired with rank of commodore 4 Sept. 1869. Among his works are, "Three Years in the Pacific," 1834; "A Voyage round the World, including an Embassy to Muscat and Siam," 1838; "Elements of Natural History," 1850; "A Lexicon of Terms used in Natural History," 1850; "Notes and Commentaries during a Voyage to Brazil and China in the Year 1848," 1854; notice of the origin, &c., of the Phila. Acad. of Nat Sciences, 8vo, 1852; besides numerous articles, on subjects connected with the navy, in the South. Lit. Messenger and Democ. Review. He has written much on medical and scientific subjects in various periodicals. — Duyckinck.

Rush, BENJAMIN, M.D. (Edinb. 1768), LL.D., physician, and signer of the Decl. of Indep., b. on Poquestion Creek, near Phila., Dec. 24, 1745; d. Phila. Apr. 19, 1813. N. J. Coll. 1760. He studied medicine in Phila., Edinb., Lond., and Paris; began practice in Phila. in Aug. 1769, and was made prof. of chemistry in the med. coll. there; in 1789 he succeeded to the chair of the theory and practice of medicine; in 1791 was made prof. of the institutes and practice of medicine and clinical practice, and in 1796 received the additional chair of the practice of physic; he was also for many years a physician in the Pa. Hospital. In the provincial conference of Pa. he moved the resolution to express in form its sentiments on the subject of a Decl. of Indep.; was chairman of the com. to consider its expediency, and was elected to Congress in season to vote for that measure. In the same year he was m. to Julia, dau. of Richard Stockton of N. J., who d. 7 July, 1848, a. 89. In Apr. 1777 he was made surg.-gen. of the middle dept.; and in July, 1777, phys.-gen. He wrote 4 letters to the people of Pa. on their constitution of 1776, which he considered very defective, and which was soon after superseded by a new form of govt. In Feb. 1778 he resigned his position in the army on account of wrongs done to the soldiers in regard to the hospital-stores. Resuming practice in Phila., he planned there, ab. 1785, the first dispensatory in the U.S. In the State conv. he was a firm supporter of the Federal Constitution; a member of the convention of Pa. to form a State constitution, and endeavored to procure the incorporation in it of his views upon public schools and a penal code, upon which he had previously written some essays. During the prevalence of yellow-fever in Phila. in 1793, Rush alone treated it successfully; Dr. Ramsay, in his eulogium upon Rush, estimating that he saved not fewer than 6,000 of the inhabitants of Phila. from death. In a single day Dr. Rush visited and prescribed for upward of 100 patients. Cobbett, in his Peter Porcupine's Gazette, assaulted Rush and his treatment of the disease, carrying his hostility to such an extent, that a suit was brought against Cobbett, and a verdict of $5,000 rendered against him. From the kings of Spain and Prussia, the queen of Etruria, and the emperor of Russia, he received marks of esteem for his medical character. Treasurer of the U.S. mint from 1799 until his death. From a part of his Journal written in his 17th year, and which he continued through life, we derive the only account of the yellow-fever of 1762 in Phila. His writings are numerous. Between 1789 and 1804 he wrote 5 vols. of "Medical Inquiries and Observations," which have been reprinted. His essays — literary, moral, and philos. — appeared in 1798, were revised in 1806; "Diseases of the Mind," 1812; at an early day he had pub. a vol. of "Medical Tracts," containing essays upon temperance, health, exercise, &c. Disting. for philanthropy and piety, and was one of the originators, and until his death vice.-pres., of the Phila. Bible Society. His latest labors were upon a work to have been called "The Medicine of the Bible," which he did not live to complete.

Rush, JACOB, LL.D., many years pres. of the C. C. P. for Phila., b. 1746; d. there Jan. 5, 1820. Bro. of Dr. Benj. N. J. Coll. 1765. In Dickinson's controversy with Reed, he wrote on the side of the former. He pub. in 1803 "Charges on Moral and Religious Subjects;" "Character of Christ," 12mo, 1806;" "Christian Baptism," 8vo, 1819; "Resolve in Committee Chamber," Phila. Dec. 6, 1774. REBECCA RUSH, his dau., pub. "Kelory," a novel, 1812.

Rush, JAMES, M.D. (U. of Pa. 1809), physician, son of Dr. Benj., b. Phila. Mar. 1, 1786, d. there May 26, 1869. N. J. Coll. 1805. He achieved a high reputation as a physician, but later in life secluded himself among his books. Author of "Philosophy of the Human Voice;" "Hamlet, a Dramatic Prelude," 1834; "Analysis of the Human Intellect," 2 vols. 8vo, 1865; "Rhymes of Contrast on Wisdom and Folly," 8vo, 1869. He left about a million of dollars to the Phila. Library Company for the erection of the "Ridgeway Branch of the Phila. Library."

Rush, RICHARD, statesman and diplomatist, son of Dr. Benj., b. Phila. Aug. 29, 1780; d. there July 30, 1859. N. J. Coll. 1797. He studied law in Phila.; was adm. to the bar in 1800; attained considerable repute by his defence of Duane, editor of the Aurora, on a charge of libel upon Gov. McKean; was app. atty.-gen. of Pa. in Jan. 1811; and in Nov. comptroller of the U.S. treasury; removing to Washington, he was from 1814 to 1817 atty.-gen. of the U.S.; was temporary sec. of state under Pres. Monroe in 1817; and in 1817–25 was minister to Eng., negotiating several important treaties, especially that of 1818 respecting our fisheries, north-eastern boundary, &c. In 1825 Pres. Adams recalled him, and made him sec. of the treasury; in 1828 he was candidate for vice.-pres. on the same ticket with Pres. Adams; in 1829 he negotiated in Holland an advantageous loan for the corporations of Washington, Georgetown, and Alexandria; in 1835 he was with Gen. Howard app. a commiss. to adjust the boundary dispute between Ohio and Michigan; in 1836 Pres. Jackson app. him commiss. to obtain the Smithsonian legacy, then in the English court of chancery; he was successful, and in Aug. 1838 returned with the entire amount, $515,169. Minister to France 1847–49. While a member of Mr. Madison's cabinet, he wrote frequently and vigorously for the newspapers in defence of the war with England; and in 1833 wrote the New-Township Acad. and the New-Haven Grammar School. He next instructed classes in elocution in Andover, Cambridge, and Boston. In 1826–9 he edited the American Journal of Education, and then removed to Germantown, Pa., where he taught a school for young ladies several years. He afterward taught in Phila. and Boston and Andover. In 1840 he established a seminary for teachers in N.H., and in 1853 removed it to Lancaster, Ms., where he long resided as director of the Normal Institute. He prepared many treatises on education, and text-books for schools, especially in reading and elocution; d. Aug. 16, 1873.

Ruter, MARTIN, D.D. (Trans. U. 1822), pres. of Augusta Coll., Ky., 1827–32, b. Charlton, Ms., Apr. 3, 1785; d. Texas, May 16, 1838. With but a common-school education, he was licensed to preach in June, 1801, when little more than 16 years of age, by the Meth. conf.; was actively employed as an itinerant preacher, becoming well versed in the languages, history, and science. At one time he had charge of the New-Market Wesleyan Acad., and in 1820 was app. to the agency of the Western Book Establishment at Cincinnati. He presided over Alleg. Coll. in 1834–7; afterward supt. of the new missions in Texas, but soon sank under the toil and exposure to which he was subjected. He pub. His house was occupied by the British as a hospital and barrack. In 1807 he delivered an address on laying the corner-stone of the D. R. Church in Orchard Street. He was a useful, respected, and wealthy citizen, a decided partisan in politics, and was very charitable both to public and private objects. Member N.Y. Assembly, and a regent N.Y.S. University 1802–26.

Rutherford, GEN. GRIFFITH, b. in Ireland; d. in Tenn. after 1794. He resided west of Salisbury, in the Locke Settlement, N.C., and in 1775 represented Rowena Co. in the convention at Newbern. In 1776 he led a large force into the Cherokee country, and assisted the people of S.C. in destroying their cornfields and settlements. App. a brigadier by the Prov. Congress in Apr. 1776; com. a brigade in the battle near Camden in Aug. 1780; was taken prisoner; and, having been exchanged, com. at Wilmington when it was evacuated by the British at the close of the war. He was a State senator in 1784, and soon after removed to Tenn.; pres. of the Tenn. legisl. council in Sept. 1794. A county in N.C. and in Tenn. bears his name. He was brave and patriotic, but uncultivated in mind and manners.

Rutledge, EDWARD, signer of the Decl. of Indep., b. Charleston, S.C., Nov. 23, 1749; d. Jan. 23, 1800. Son of Dr. John, who came from Ireland about 1735. He was the bro. of John, in whose office he studied law; to complete which, in 1769 he went to Eng., and was entered at the Temple. On his return in 1773 he commenced practice, and was obtaining distinction, when he was chosen to the First Congress assembled at Phila. in 1794. He continued a member until 1777, taking an active part in the debates. In June, 1776, he was app. a member of the first board of war. He was one of the com. to confer with Lord Howe, one of the British commissioners. Again app. to Congress in 1779, he was prevented by indisposition from taking his seat. His native State having become the theatre of war, Mr. Rutledge com. a company of art., which succeeded in dislodging a party of regular troops from Port-Royal Island. In 1780 he was made prisoner at Charleston, and suffered a year's confinement at St. Augustine before he was exchanged. He resided near Phila. until the evacuation of Charleston in 1782, when, as a member of the Assembly convened at Jacksonborough, he assented to the adoption of a bill of pains and penalties, though leniently inclined. He then returned home, and resumed the practice of his profession. In the legisl. of the State he drew up the act for the abolition of the rights of primogeniture; he was opposed to the further increase of African slavery in the South, and an untiring advocate of the Federal Constitution. He was subsequently col. of a regt. of art., and supplied the place of Gen. Pinckney in the senate in 1794. In 1798 he was elected gov. He declined a seat on the bench of the U.S. Supreme Court.

Rutledge, REV. EDWARD of S.C.; d. Savannah, Ga., 1832. Y.C. 1817. Prof. moral philos. U. of Pa., and pres.-elect of Transylv. U. Pub. "Family Altar," "History of the Church of England," 12mo, 1825. — Allibone.

was chairman of the com. which prepared the constitution of that State, and was without opposition elected pres. of the new govt. When Fort Moultrie was attacked by the British in June, Rutledge, against the advice of Gen. Lee, sent to it 500 lbs. of powder, and directed Moultrie not to evacuate it without an order from him; adding, "I would sooner cut off my right hand than write one." He resigned in 1778, but, on the approach of the British in 1779, was chosen gov., and clothed with dictatorial power. When in 1780 Charleston fell, Rutledge retired to N.C., and for nearly two years accomp. and aided the Southern army. He was elected to Congress in 1782, having retired from the governorship; was chosen chancellor of the State in March, 1784; and, while holding that office, became a member of the conv. for framing the Federal Constitution, in which he bore a prominent part, and in the State convention strongly supported its ratification. In Sept. 1789 he was app. an assoc. judge of the U.S. Supreme Court; which office he resigned in 1791, when he was elected chief justice of S.C. In July, 1795, Washington app. him chief justice of the U.S., and he presided at the succeeding term of the Supreme Court; but the senate, on assembling in Dec., for political reasons refused to confirm the appointment. Previously, however, an attack of sickness had deprived Rutledge of his reason, in which condition he died. He was disting. for eloquence, decision of character, and integrity. His son Gen. JOHN, M.C. 1797–1803, d. Phila. Sept. 1, 1819, a. 53.

Ruxton, GEORGE FREDERICK, an English traveller, b. 1820; d. St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 29, 1848. At the age of 17 he left the military coll. of Sandhurst to enlist in the Spanish army against Don Carlos, and rendered valuable services. On his return to Eng. in 1839, he received a lieutenant's commission in the 89th, with which he went to Canada, but, soon resigning, spent some years among the Indians and trappers of the West, graphically depicted in his "Adventures in the Rocky Mountains and Mexico," and "Life in the Far West." He afterward made journeys to N. and S. Africa and to Mexico; and in 1848 again started from Eng. for the Rocky Mountains, but died on the way.

Saffold, REUBEN, jurist, b. Wilkes Co., Ga., Sept. 4, 1788; d. Dallas Co., Ala., Feb. 15, 1847. After practising law in Ga., he in 1813 removed to Jackson, Ala., where, during the Indian troubles, he com. a vol. company, serving also several times in the Terr. legisl. of Mpi.; was in 1819 in the State Const. Conv.; in Dec. 1819 was app. one of the circuit judges, becoming also a member of the Supreme Court; in 1832 was one of the 3 judges app. to the Supreme bench, of which, in 1835–6, he was chief justice.

Safford, TRUMAN HENRY, mathematician and astron., b. Royalton, Vt., 6 Jan. 1836. H.U. 1854. His youthful precocity was remarkable. In his 9th year he could multiply mentally four figures by four figures as rapidly as it could be done with slate and pencil, and could also extract the square and cube roots of 9 or 10 places of figures. His first almanac was prepared in 1845, at the age of nine and a half years. At 14 he astonished the learned world by the production of the elliptic elements of the first comet of 1849. By a method of his own, young Safford abridged the labor of calculating moon risings and settings by one-fourth, and that of calculating eclipses by one-third. He required the longest and most difficult question to be read to him but once, and his answers were usually given without effort or fatigue. Prof. Pierce said of him in 1846, that his knowledge and the capacity to acquire it "is accompanied with powers of abstraction and concentration rarely possessed at any age except by minds of the highest order." In Mar. 1863 he was made adjunct observer at the Cambridge Observatory, acting director in Feb. 1865; and 28 Dec. 1865 he became director of the Chicago Observatory, which post he yet holds. In 1863 he determined the right ascension of 1,700 stars, and the declination of 450. In 1865 he observed over 6,000 transits, an extensive series of which, commenced in 1862, is completed. After the death of Prof. G. P. Bond, 17 Feb. 1865, the incomplete report of his valuable discoveries in the constellation of Orion was written out in full by Mr. Safford, constituting the 5th vol. of the Annals of the Observatory. — See Ladies' Repos., Cin., 1849, for acc. of the diff. examinations of young Safford, and notice of his life.

Safford, WILLIAM H., b. Parkersburg, Va., 1821; in 1848 removed to Chillicothe, O.; member Ohio senate 1858–60. Author of "Life of Blennerhassett," 12mo, 1850; "The Blennerhassett Papers," 8vo, 1864. — Allibone.

Sahagun de (dā sä-ä-goon'), BERNARDINO, a Franciscan friar, b. Sahagun, Spain; a missionary to Mexico in 1529; d. 1590. Author of a valuable history, "Historia Universal de Nueva España," first pub. in Mexico in 1829.

St. Clair, ARTHUR, maj.-gen. Revol. army, b. Thurso, Caithness, Scotland, 1734; d. Laurel Hill, Pa., 31 Aug. 1818. U. of Edinb. Grandson of the Earl of Roslyn. He studied medicine with the celebrated John Hunter in Lond., but, inheriting a large sum of money on the death of his mother, purchased an ensigncy 60th Foot, 13 May, 1757; came in Boscawen's fleet to Amer. in 1758; served under Amherst at the taking of Louisburg; was made a lieut. 17 Apr. 1759; and was disting. under Wolfe at Quebec. May 14, 1760, he m. at Boston Phebe, dau. of Balthazar Bayard and Mary Bowdoin, a half-sister of Gov. James Bowdoin. Resigned his com. 16 Apr. 1762, and in 1764 settled in the Ligonier Valley, Pa., where he erected mills and also a fine residence. App. in 1770 surveyor of the Dist. of Cumberland; a justice of the Court of Quarter Sessions and of C.C.P., and a member of the proprietary council; in 1771 a justice, recorder, clerk of the orphans' court, and prothonotary of Bedford, and in 1773 of Westmoreland County. In July, 1775, he became col. of militia, and in the fall accomp. as sec. the commissioners, James Wilson, Lewis Morris, and Dr. Walker, to treat with the Western tribes at Fort Pitt; col. 2d Pa. Regt. 3 Jan. 1776, ordered to Canada Feb. 16; joined Sullivan, and, after the disastrous affair at Three Rivers, aided that officer by his counsel in saving his army from capture; brig.-gen. 9 Aug. 1776; maj.-gen. 19 Feb. 1777. In Jan. 1776, St. Clair resigned all his lucrative civil offices. Joining Washington in Nov. 1776, he was at once app. to organize the N. J. militia. He recommended in council on the night of 2 Jan. 1777 the flank-movement which brought on the battle of Princeton, at which he rendered valuable service by protecting the fords of Assanpink. After performing for a short time the duties of adj.-gen. of the army, he in March succeeded Gates in com. at Phila., and Apr. 1 took com. of Ticonderoga, which, on the night of 4 July, he was obliged to evacuate, his force being wholly inadequate to its defence. A court-martial held in Sept. 1778 declared that "Maj.-Gen. St. Clair is acquitted with the highest honor of the charges against him." Though unemployed, in deference to the public clamor against him, he remained one of Washington's military family, acting as his vol. aide at Brandywine (Sept. 11, 1777); assisted Sullivan in preparing his exped. against the Six Nations; was one of the commiss. to arrange a cartel with the British at Amboy 9 Mar. 1780; Aug. 1 was app. to com. the corps of light inf. in the absence of Lafayette; was a member of the court-martial which condemned Maj. André; com. at West Point from Oct. 1; aided in suppressing the mutiny in the Pa. line in Jan. 1781; was active in raising and forwarding troops to the South; and in Oct. joined Washington, and participated in the capture of Cornwallis at Yorktown. In Nov. he was placed in com. of a body of troops to effect a junction with Greene, and remained in the South until Oct. 1782. Member of the Pa. council of censors 1783; delegate to Congress 2 Nov. 1785–28 Nov. 1787; pres. of that body 2 Feb.–28 Nov. 1787; chosen a member Amer. Philos. Soc. 1786; app. gov. N.W. Terr. 1 Feb. 1788; made a treaty with Indian tribes at Fort Harmar in 1789; Jan. 1790 he fixed the seat of justice of the Terr. at Cincinnati, giving it the name in honor of the soc of which he was pres. for Pa. in 1783–9; app. gen.-in-chief of the army 4 Mar. 1791, he moved against the Indians of the Miami and the Wabash, suffering so severely from gout as to have to be carried about on a litter. The proximity of the foe was communicated by the scouts on the night of Nov. 3 to Gen. Butler, 2d in com., but not to St. Clair. About sunrise on the morning of the 4th, an attack was made by the Indians; and, in spite of St. Clair's exertions, he was defeated, losing 600 men out of a force of 1,400. A com. of investigation, app. by Congress, after a thorough examination, completely vindicated him. He resigned his generalcy 5 Mar. 1792, and 22 Nov. 1802 he was removed from his governorship by Jefferson. Retiring to a small log-house on the summit of Chestnut Ridge, he passed the remainder of his days in poverty, vainly endeavoring to effect a settlement of his claims against the govt. The legisl. of Pa. in 1813 granted him an annuity of $400, and a short time before his death he received a pension from the govt. of $60 per month. He pub. a narr. of his campaign of 1791, with observations on the statements of the sec. of war, 1812. — A. T. Goodman's Memoir, from St. Clair's papers.

St. Leger, Col. Barry, a British officer; d. in 1789. He entered the army, Apr. 27, 1756, as ensign 28th Foot; accomp. his regt. to Amer. in 1757; served at the siege of Louisburg in 1758 as capt. in the 48th, and afterwards under Wolfe at Quebec. In July, 1760, he was app. brigade major; became major of the 95th, Sept. 16, 1662; lieut.-col. May, 1772; in May, 1775, was app. to the 34th Foot, and was sent soon after to Canada. He com. the unsuccessful exped. against Fort Schuyler in Aug. 1777, intended to co-operate with Burgoyne, when he held the local rank of brigadier, and became a col. in Nov. 1780.

Saint Simon (sän sē'-mōn'), Claude Anne, Marquis de, a Spanish gen., b. at the Castle of La Faye, France, 1743; d. 3 Jan. 1819. At the close of 1779 he sailed with his regt. for Martinique, and sustained during the voyage 3 actions with Rodney; Mar. 1, 1780, he entered the service of Spain as maréchal-de-camp, and was sent to America with a corps of 2,000 men, which he com. during the remainder of the war, receiving several wounds, and contrib. to the successful siege of Yorktown. A dep. to the states-gen. in 1789; he returned to Spain, and at the affair of Irun received a ball through his neck; soon afterwards made lieut.-gen.; he was again wounded by a ball in the breast while defending the position of Argensu; and in 1808, when the French attacked Madrid, defended it courageously, but was made prisoner, and condemned to death, which sentence was afterward commuted at the intercession of his dau. After the re-establishment of Ferdinand VII., in 1814, Saint Simon returned to Spain, and was made capt.-gen. and a grandee of Spain.

Saint Vallier (sän' vă'-lea'), Jean Baptiste de Lacroix, Chevrière de, second bishop of Quebec, b. Grenoble, Nov. 14, 1653; d. Quebec, Dec. 26, 1727. He was chaplain to Louis XIV. in 1684, when he was app. vicar-gen. by Bishop de Laval. He arrived in Canada July 30, 1685; returned to Paris in Nov. 1687; was consec. bishop of Quebec Jan. 25, 1688; and in Aug. returned to Canada. He founded the Gen. Hospital of Quebec; revisited France; and on his return to Canada, in July, 1704, was captured by the English, and remained prisoner until 1709. He pub. in Paris in 1688, "État présent de l'Église et de la Colonie Françoise dans la Nouvelle France," also pub. under the title of "Relation des Missions de la Nouvelle France."

Salaberry, Col. Charles Michel, d'Iramberry, Seigneur de Chambly et de Beaulac, a Canadian soldier, born at the Manor House of Beauport, Canada, Nov. 19, 1778; d. Chambly, Feb. 26, 1829. Son of a member of the legisl. council, and descended from a noble family of Navarre. Entering the army young, he served 11 years in the W. Indies; was at the conquest of Martinique in 1795; became aide-de-camp to Gen. de Rottenburg, and served in the Walcheren exped.; returning to Canada, he organized the Voltigeurs; repulsed Dearborn's forces at Lacolle, at the close of 1812; and at Chateauguay, Oct. 26, 1813, gained a decisive victory over Gen. Wade Hampton. For these services he received a gold medal, the order of the Bath, and the thanks of the prov. legisl. He was afterward a senator, at the same time entering the legisl. council as Monseigneur Plessis. — Morgan.

Salomon, Gen. Frederick, b. near Halberstadt, Prussia, Apr. 7, 1826. He received his early education at the gymnasium there; became a govt. surveyor; served in the Prussian art.; and in 1848 became a pupil in the Royal Berlin Acad. of Architecture. He soon after emigrated to the U.S. with his bro. Wm. (gov. of Wis. 1862–3); settled at Manitowoc, Wis., where he was a surveyor; was 4 years register of deeds, and chief engr. on the Manitowoc and Mpi. Railroad until 1859; in the spring of 1861 he became capt. in the 5th Mo. Vols., and served under Sigel in the battle of Wilson's Creek; col. 9th Wis. Vols. in Aug. 1861; brig.-gen. San Martin, JOSÉ DE, a disting. South Amer. leader, b. on the banks of the Parana. He left the service of Spain with the rank of capt. in 1811, and, returning to his own country, received from the revol. govt. of Buenos Ayres the com. of a division, with the rank of col. A success over a royalist detachment at San Lorenzo in 1813 procured him the com. of the Province of Tucuman, which ill-health obliged him to resign in 1814. Obtaining, on resuming active service, the com. of the Province of Cuyo, contiguous to Chili, he planned, with O'Higgins and other Chilian exiles, its liberation. Feb. 12, 1817, they gained a complete victory over the Spanish forces at Chacabuco. A final victory over the viceroy of Peru at Mapu, April 5, 1818, achieved the deliverance of Chili, of which O'Higgins became supreme director. He now conceived the plan of liberating Peru itself, the only remaining possession of Spain in South America. The liberating army sailed from Valparaiso, Aug. 21, 1820, supported by a squadron under Lord Cochrane, and, being sustained by the Peruvians, gained possession of the country; installed a revol. govt. at Lima; and Aug. 3, 1821, declared San Martin protector. A congress was convened by him at Lima, Sept. 20, 1822, into whose hands he immediately resigned all his authority, accepting, in return, only the honorary titles of generalissimo and founder of the liberty of Peru, with a pension. He left Peru in 1824; res. 25 years in Paris, and d. Boulogne-sur-Mer, France, Aug. 17, 1850.

San Roman, GEN. MIGUEL, pres. of Peru from 1862 to his d. Apr. 1863; b. 1802.

Santa Aña, ANTONIO LOPEZ DE, pres. of Mexico, b. Jalapa, Feb. 21, 1798. Having expelled the royalists from Vera Cruz in 1821, he com. there until deposed in Nov. 1822. He immediately raised the banner of the republic in Vera Cruz, and overthrew Iturbide. Placing himself at the head of the federalists, he was defeated, and retired to his estate near Jalapa until 1828; he then sided with Guerrero, who in 1829 app. him com. of his army. When in 1830 Bustamente attained the presidency, he espoused the cause of Pedrazza, against whom he had formerly supported Guerrero. He defeated the army sent against him, and Pedrazza was pres. until 1833. In March, Santa Aña was chosen pres., but could not gain the confidence of the people. He defeated Arista and D'Arran in 1833; in 1835 he defeated at Zacatecas the reform party, and announced himself dictator. The discontented flocked to Texas, and proclaimed a govt. The ensuing war ended in his capture at San Jacinto in Apr. 1836, and the indep. of Texas. In Dec. 1838, he lost a leg in the defence of Vera Cruz against the French. Again pres. in 1841, a new revolution hurled him from power in 1845. The war against the U.S. again placed him in power. Feb. 22, 1846, he fought the battle of Buena Vista with 17,000 men: Gen. Taylor, his antagonist, having 4,000 or 5,000, gained the victory. Santa Aña was then deposed by the senate. Recalled in 1847, he lost the decisive battle of Cerro Gordo, but was again proclaimed pres. The Mexicans were unsuccessful; a treaty signed Feb. 22, 1848, ceded the Territory of California; and Santa Aña exiled himself to Jamaica. In 1853 he contrived to subvert the power of Pres. Arista, and obtained his own recall. As pres. he governed despotically for two years, but in the autumn of 1855, foreseeing danger, he suddenly resigned, and escaped from the country. Upon the fall of Maximilian his ambition revived, and he landed June 4, 1867, at Vera Cruz, expecting to inaugurate a revolution, but was seized and imprisoned at Sisal, and sentenced to be shot; but was pardoned, and d. June 20, 1876.

Santa Cruz, ANDRES, statesman and soldier, b. Peru ab. 1800. Served in the war of independence in 1823; succeeded Sucre as president of Bolivia in 1829; was defeated at Yungai in 1839, and compelled to quit the country; and in 1849 became minister from Bolivia to London, Paris, Rome, and Madrid.

Santana, GEN. PEDRO, ex-pres. of St. Domingo; d. there June 14, 1864. In 1844 he acquired the title of Liberator by securing the independence of the Dominican republic of the Island of Hayti; pres. in 1844–9, he established the new nation on a firm footing. On the invasion by Soulouque, the Haytien emperor, in 1849, he was made dictator, and defeated him in a decisive battle near Savanna Munero, Apr. 22. He was again president in 1853–7, defeating Soulouque in 1855 and 1856, and in Sept. 1857 expelled his successor Baez, and restored liberal rule. In the spring of 1861 Spain undertook to re-annex the republic to its dominions, and Santana was bribed into adhesion with a lieut.-generalship in the Spanish army, a title of nobility, and various decorations. He died hated by his countrymen, and neglected by those to whom he had sold them.

in prosecuting the war in Quito and Peru. In this position he acted with prudence, ability, and success. Entering upon his second term of office in 1827, Santander was from that time opposed to Bolivar, and was regarded as his personal enemy, but in fact was hostile only to the design of the liberator to suspend or subvert the constitution. Bolivar succeeded in gaining absolute authority; and Santander was subsequently charged with a share in an unsuccessful plot to kill the dictator. He was banished from the country, and during his exile visited Eng., France, and Germany. In 1832 Santander was elected pres. of the republic of New Granada.

Sargeant, NATHANIEL PEASLEE, jurist, b. Methuen, Nov. 2, 1731; d. Haverhill, Oct. 1791. H.U. 1750. Son of Rev. Christopher of Methuen. Sayre, Stephen, banker and patriot, b. Long Island 1734; d. at the residence of his son in Va. Sept. 27, 1818. N. J. Coll. 1757. Bred a merchant, by his activity and talents he had obtained much distinction at the period of the Revol. Was sheriff of London with Wm. Lee, brother of Richard Henry, in 1774; and was particularly in the confidence of the Earl of Chatham at a critical period, having become a banker. His zeal for the independence of his native country was unmeasured, and an officer of the Royal Guards, named Richardson, also an American, seized upon a gay and unguarded expression of Mr. Sayre to bring a charge of high treason for imagining the death of the king, and he was committed to the Tower. The charge soon ended in Mr. Sayre's release; but it had already produced his ruin. His banking-house failed; he lost every thing, and was obliged to quit England. He was then employed by Dr. Franklin upon several important missions, acted for some time as his private sec., and went in the suite of Mr. Lee to Berlin at the time of the first suggestion of the project of armed neutrality. After leaving Berlin, Mr. Sayre passed to Copenhagen, Stockholm, and St. Petersburg, and in each of those capitals procured ample supplies for the support of American indep. In 1795 he was an active opponent of Washington's administration.

Schurz (shoorts), CARL, orator and politican, b. Liblar, near Cologne, Germany, Mar. 2, 1829. He studied at the Gymnasium of Cologne and at the U. of Bonn; engaged in the revol. outbreak in 1848; joined Gottfried Kinkel in the pub. of a liberal newspaper; but, after an unsuccessful attempt at insurrection at Bonn in the spring of 1849, both were obliged to fly. As adjutant he participated in the defence of Rastadt, and on its surrender made his way to Switzerland. He rescued Kinkel from the fortress of Spandau on the night of Nov. 6, 1850; crossed the frontier into Mecklenburg; thence went to Rostock, and took passage in a schooner for Leith. Schurz then went to Paris, where he was corresp. for German journals till June, 1851, when he went to London, where he was a teacher till July, 1852. He then m., came to Phila., where he remained 3 years, and then settled at Madison, Wis. In the presidential campaign of 1856 he became known as an orator in the German language; in 1858, when Mr. Douglas and Mr. Lincoln were contesting the U.S. senatorship, he delivered his first English speech, which was widely circulated. He next established himself in the practice of law at Milwaukie, and engaged in a lecturing-tour in the winter of 1859–60. In the Repub. Nat. Conv. of 1860 he exercised great influence, especially in determining that portion of the platform relating to citizens of foreign origin. During the canvass which followed, he spoke effectively throughout the Northern States. After Mr. Lincoln's inauguration he was app. minister to Spain. He returned to the U.S. in Dec. 1861; resigned his office as minister; became brig.-gen. of vols. April 15, 1862; maj.-gen. Mar. 14, 1863; June 17 he took com. of a division in the corps of Siegel, with which he disting. himself at the second battle of Bull Run, but was routed by Jackson at the battle of Chancellorsville. He was temporarily in com. of the 11th corps at the battle of Gettysburg, July 1, 1863, where he was conspicuous, as also at Fredericksburg. App. a commiss. to examine and report on the condition of the Southern States, especially upon the Freedmen's Bureau, his report [redacted] extremely distasteful to Pres. Johnson. In 1865–6 he was N.Y. Tribune corresp. in Washington; in 1867 he was editor of the Detroit Post. He took a leading part in the Chicago convention in 1868, of which he was temporary chairman; labored zealously for the election of Gen. Grant; and in Jan. 1869 was chosen U. S. senator from Mo. A vol. of his speeches was pub. 8vo, 1865.

Schuyler (skī'-ler), Col. Peter, mayor of Albany, disting. for his patriotism and for his influence over the Indians. In 1691 he headed a successful exped. against the French settlements north of Lake Champlain. His recommendations had to the 5 Nations of Indians the force of law. In 1710, at his own expense, he took 5 Indian chiefs to Eng. for the purpose of exciting the govt. to vigorous measures against the French in Canada. In 1719, as the oldest member of the council, the chief com. in N.Y. devolved upon him. He often warned the N.E. Colonies of exped. meditated against them by the French and Indians.

Schuyler, Col. Peter, b. Albany ab. 1710; d. at his residence on the Passaic, near Newark, N. J., Nov. 17, 1762. Grandson of Philip Pieterse of Albany, and second son of Arent of N. Jersey by his second wife. In 1746, on the projected invasion of Canada, he was put in com. of the N. J. regt. In Dec. 1755 he attended the congress called by Gov. Shirley at N.Y., and was stationed with his regt. at Oswego until its reduction by the French, Aug. 14, 1756, when he was released on parole, after a brief imprisonment in Canada. In 1759 he again com. the N.J. regt. with which he served under Amherst in the conquest of Canada. While a prisoner in Montreal, he kept open house for the relief of his fellow-sufferers, and redeemed from the Indians many of their captives.

Schuyler, Philip, maj.-gen. Revol. army, b. Albany, 22 Nov. 1733; d. there 18 Nov. 1804. His father dying while he was young, he was adopted into the family of Col. Philip Schuyler, whose estate in Saratoga he afterwards inherited. Receiving by the law of primogeniture the whole of his father's estate, he divided it equally with his brothers and sisters. He was a capt. of N.Y. levies at Ft. Edward in 1755; a commiss. in the army in 1755–63; was a prominent member of the N.Y. legisl., and, with Geo. Clinton, was chiefly instrumental in determining the early and decided resistance of the province to the measures of Britain; a delegate to Congress, he was with Washington on the committee to draw up rules and regulations for the army; 19 June, 1775, was made a maj.-gen., and placed in com. of the Northern army, but relinquished it to Montgomery in Sept. on account of illness. Upon his recovery he devoted himself zealously to his arduous duties, particularly to the superintendence of Indian affairs. The energy of his character, and the dignity of his deportment, excited popular jealousy and ill-will, and in Oct. 1776 he tendered his resignation. Congress declared that it could not dispense with his services; and its president requested him to continue in command. On the approach of Burgoyne's army in 1777, he did all in his power to impede its advance by obstructing the navigation of Wood Creek, rendering the roads impassable, removing all provisions and stores beyond its reach, and summoning the militia of N.Y. and N.E. to his assistance; but the necessary evacuation of Ticonderoga by St. Clair occasioning unreasonable jealousies in regard to Schuyler in N.E., he was superseded by Gates in Aug., though Congress, upon investigation, warmly approved his conduct. Though "sensible of the indignity," and though superseded by a man who had ever been his enemy, this patriot offered to serve his country as a private gentleman in any way in which he could be useful. He was present at Burgoyne's surrender, though without command, and resigned 19 Apr. 1779. Member Cont. Congress 1778–81. In Nov. 1779 he was app. to confer with Washington on the state of the Southern dept.; U.S. senator 1789–91 and again in 1797. In the N.Y. senate he was a principal contrib. to the Code of Laws adopted by the State, and was active and efficient in promoting the system of inland navigation in N.Y. — See his Life and Times by B. J. Lossing, 2 vols. 1860–2.

Scott, WINFIELD, lieut.-gen. U.S.A., b. Petersburg, Va., June 13, 1786; d. West Point, N.Y., May 29, 1866. Wm. and M. Coll. 1804. Left an orphan in his boyhood, he studied law, and was adm. to the bar in 1806. App. capt. of art. May 3, 1808; lieut.-col. 2d Art. July 6, 1812; adj.-gen. (rank of col.) March 18, 1813; col. 2d Art. March 12, 1813; brig.-gen. March 9, 1814; maj.-gen. and gen. in chief of the army, June 25, 1841; brev. lieut.-gen. Feb. 28, 1855. Ordered to the Canada frontier in July, 1812, he was made prisoner, Oct. 13, at Queenston Heights; exchanged in the early part of 1813; joined the army of Gen. Dearborn in March, 1813; com. the advance in the attack on Fort George, May 27, and was severely injured by the explosion of a magazine at its surrender. Crossing the Niagara River, July 3, 1814, on the 5th he defeated the British at Chippewa; on the 25th was fought the battle of Lundy's Lane, near Niagara Falls, in which Scott had 2 horses killed under him, and received two severe wounds, one of which left his arm partially disabled. These two engagements, fought with the best British troops, established the prestige of our arms. For these brilliant services he was awarded by Congress a gold medal, Nov. 3, 1814, and was offered, but declined, the secretaryship of war. Visiting Europe in a military and diplomatic capacity, he enjoyed in France the converse and association of the leading captains of Napoleon. During the nullification troubles in 1832, he was sent to Charleston on a confidential mission, which was completely successful. His prudence and discretion were eminently shown in procuring the removal of the Cherokees from Ga. in 1838, in the Canadian rebellion of 1837–9, and in the boundary dispute between Me. and N. Brunswick in 1839. The annexation of Texas having resulted in war with Mexico, March 9, 1847, Scott landed with 12,000 men at Vera Cruz, invested the city and the castle of St. Juan d'Ulloa, both which capitulated on the 26th; taking up the march toward the capital, he gained successively the battles of Cerro Gordo (April 18), Contreras, San Antonio, and Churubusco (Aug. 19 and 20), Molino del Rey (Sept. 8), Chapultepec (Sept. 13), and captured the city of Mexico (Sept. 14). In these engagements, the Mexicans, though greatly superior in numbers, and having every advantage of position, were signally defeated. In 1852 he was the unsuccessful nominee of the Whig party for the presidency. On the breaking-out of the civil war, he urged wise precautions to prevent the armed withdrawal of the 11 seceding States from the Union, secured the safe inaug. of Pres. Lincoln, the defence of the national capital, the organization of the Union army, and its establishment upon the strategetic points of the country. He retired from active service, Nov. 1, 1861, visited Europe in Nov., and devoted his later days to the preparation of his "Autobiography," 2 vols. 8vo, 1864. Also author of "General Regulations for the Army," 1825; and "Infantry Tactics," 1835.

He early engaged in the cause of liberty, and in 1774 was one of the com. which drew up articles of association for its defence in Ga. A brig.-gen., commanding the Ga. militia when that State was invaded from E. Fla., he had repeated skirmishes with them between Sunbury and Savannah, in one of which he fell. Congress ordered the erection of a monument to his memory.

Scudder, HORACE ELISHA, b. Boston, 1838. Wms. Coll. 1858. Author of "Seven Little People and their Friends," 1862; "Dream-Children," 1863; "Life and Letters of D. C. Scudder, Missionary," &c., 8vo, 1864; "Stories from my Attic," 1869. Editor of Riverside Mag., and contrib. to Atlantic Monthly, N.A. Review, &c. — Allibone.

Scudder, JOHN, M.D. (Coll. of Phys. and S. 1815), missionary, b. N. Brunswick, N.J., Sept. 3, 1793; d. Wynberg, Cape of Good Hope, Jan. 13, 1855. N.J. Coll. 1811. He studied medicine, and settled in N.Y., where he had previously been house-surgeon of the city hospital. Giving up an extensive practice, he offered himself as a missionary to the Amer. Board; studied theology; and in 1819 was ord. as a minister of the D. R. Church. For 19 years he labored in Ceylon, where he also conducted a large hospital, and attained a high reputation as a surgeon and physician, also superintending a number of schools. He was transferred to the Madras mission in 1839; revisited Amer. in 1842–6; but, visiting the Cape of Good Hope on account of his health in 1854, died there. He pub. "The Redeemer's Last Command," "The Harvest Perishing," "Knocking at the Door," "Letters to Children on Missionary Subjects," "Letters from the East," 1833; "Letters to Pious Young Men," 8vo, 1846, &c. His children, 8 sons and 2 daughters, all devoted themselves to missionary labors. — See Memoir by Rev. J. B. Waterbury, 12mo.

Scudder, COL. NATHANIEL, long a member of the N. J. Assembly; member of the Old Congress 1777–9; killed in a skirmish with an invading-party of the enemy at Shrewsbury, N. J., Oct. 15, 1781. N.J. Coll. 1751.

Seabury, Samuel, D.D. (Oxf. U. 1777), first Prot.-Epis. bishop of the U.S., b. Groton, Ct., Nov. 30, 1729; d. Feb. 25, 1796. Y.C. 1748. Son of a Cong. minister of Groton. In 1751 he went to Scotland to study medicine, but turned his attention to theology, and in 1753 was ord. in Lond. He returned to Amer.; was settled at N. Brunswick, N.J.; at Jamaica, L.I., 1756–66; and at Westchester until the commencement of hostilities, when he went to N.Y.; and at one time was chaplain of the king's Amer. regt., also practising medicine. Being the supposed author of some Tory pamphlets, he was in 1775 seized by a party of soldiers, carried to N. Haven, and imprisoned. As the fact of authorship could not be proved, he was suffered to return to Westchester, where he continued to exert himself in behalf of the same opinions. He made a voyage to Eng. in March, 1784, to obtain consecration as bishop of Ct. Meeting with obstacles to his wishes from the English prelates, he was consecrated by three bishops of the Scottish Epis. Church, Nov. 14, 1784, and subsequently fulfilled the duties of his pastoral office at New London till his death. He took part in revising the Prayer-Book, and framing the const. of the church, which was adopted in 1789. He pub. in 1791 two vols. of sermons, to which a suppt. was added in 1798; also two religious tracts.

Seabury, Samuel, D.D., clerg., grandson of the preceding, b. Hartford, Ct., June 9, 1801. Ord. deacon, Apr. 12, 1826; priest, July 7, 1828. Originally a school-teacher. He was for a time missionary to Huntington and Oyster Bay, L.I.; removed to Hallett's Cove (now Astoria), where he founded St. George's Church; became a teacher in the Flushing Inst. in 1830; and in 1834 removed to N.Y. to take charge of the Churchman, newspaper. This journal attained great influence in the Epis. Church, especially in the discussion respecting the Oxford tracts and kindred matters. In 1849 he became rector of the Church of the Annunciation in N.Y. In 1863 he succeeded Dr. Turner as prof. of biblical learning in the Epis. Theol. Sem., N.Y. He has pub. "The Continuity of the Church of Eng. in the 16th Century," N.Y. 1853, 8vo; "Amer. Slavery Justified," 1861, and other works, beside a number of occas. sermons and addresses; d. N.Y. City, Oct. 10, 1872.

Sealsfield, Charles, novelist, b. 1797; d. Solothurn, Switzerland, 26 May, 1864. He resided in Amer. until 1844, when he went to Switzerland. Most of his works were originally written in German. One of the most important of them, "Tokeah, or the White Rose," app. first in English at Phila. in 1828. His "Trans-Atlantic Travelling Sketches," "Pictures of Life in both Hemispheres," and "South and North," are of striking merit; while his great Mexican novel, "The Viceroy and the Aristocracy," is said to be the most powerful and original of his works. About 1830 he was connected with the press of Lond. and Paris.

ship of the Letters of "Massachusettensis" (see John Adams's reprint of the Letters of Novanglus and M.), although Trumbull, in his burlesque of Gage's proclamation (the foundation of McFingal) in 1775, assigned the authorship properly to Daniel Leonard.

Sewall, JONATHAN MITCHELL, lawyer and poet, b. Salem, Ms., 1748; d. Portsmouth, N.H., March 29, 1808. He was adopted by his uncle, Chief Justice Stephen Sewall. Studied law; was disting. at the bar; and in 1774 was register of probate for Grafton Co., N. H., afterward removing to Portsmouth, N.H. For many years previous to his death he was intemperate. His occasional poetic pieces, some of which attained great popularity, were collected and pub. in 1801; many were of a political cast, and were printed in most of the Federal gazettes from Maine to Georgia. He was noted for wit, and was eminent in social qualities. In his epilogue to the tragedy of "Cato," written in 1778, occurs the well-known couplet: —

> "No pent-up Utica contracts your powers;
> But the whole boundless continent is yours."

His lyrics, especially his "War and Washington," warmed the patriotism and cheered the hearts of the soldiers of the Revol. In 1798 he printed "The Versification of Washington's Farewell Address;" and in 1788 delivered "The Fourth-of-July Oration" in Portsmouth, which was published.

An assist. in 1684–6, he made a voyage to England in 1688, and, returning in 1689, resumed his seat at the board of assistants. He was annually chosen to the council from 1692 until 1725; was a judge from 1692 to 1718, when he was made chief justice; and in 1728 resigned, in consequence of age and infirmity, this, as well as the office of judge of probate for Suffolk. Sharing in the then general belief in witchcraft, he concurred in the condemnations in 1692; but at a public fast, Jan. 14, 1697, a "bill" was read by his minister, Rev. Samuel Willard, before the cong., in which he acknowledged his own guilt, asked the pardon both of God and man, and deprecated the divine judgments for his sin. He contributed liberally to the spread of the gospel among the Indians; and in 1699 was chosen one of the commiss. of the Society in Eng. for the Propagation of the Gospel in N.E., and soon after their sec. and treasurer. His sympathy for African slaves prompted him in 1700 to pub. a tract entitled "The Selling of Joseph," in which he advocated their rights; it being his opinion that there would "be no progress in gospelling" until slavery was abolished. His benevolence and charity were great, and his house was a seat of hospitality. He published "Answer to Queries respecting America," 1690; "Accomplishment of Prophecies," 1713; "A Memorial relating to the Kennebec Indians," 1721; "A Description of the New Heaven," &c., 1727. Adm. to the bar in 1844; delegate to the Whig convs. of 1844 and '48; M.C. 1855–61; U.S. senator since 1861. A leading member of the finance committee through the civil war, and for some time its chairman. Sherman and Thad. Stevens were the authors of the bill enacted in 1866–7 for the reconstruction of the seceded States.

Sherman, ROGER, signer of the Decl. of Indep., b. Newton, Ms., Apr. 19, 1721; d. New Haven, Ct., July 23, 1793. He was a shoemaker till after he was 22 years old, and after his father's death in 1741 supported his mother and several younger children, devoting all his leisure to study, especially of mathematics. In 1743 he went to N. Milford, Ct., and soon afterward joined an elder bro. in keeping a small store; in 1745 he was app. county surveyor of lands, and for several years from 1748 furnished the astronomical calculations for an almanac pub. in N.Y. Having studied law, he was adm. to the bar in 1754; was several times elected to the Assembly; and in 1759 was app. judge of the C.C.P. He removed to N. Haven in 1761; became judge of C.C.P. there in 1765; an assist. in 1766, holding the latter office 19 years, and the judgeship till 1789, a portion of the time on the bench of the Superior Court; in 1774 he was app. a member of Congress, — a post in which he continued till his death, at which time he held a seat in the U.S. senate; he was also a member of the council of safety, and, from 1784 till his death, mayor of New Haven; and he was many years treas. of Y.C. In the Congress of 1776 he was one of the com. app. to draught the Decl. of Indep.; and during the war he served on many important committees, and was successively a member of the board of war and ordnance, and of the board of treasury. In 1783 he was associated with another judge in codifying the laws of Ct. He had been one of the com. which framed the old Articles of Confederation, and was one of the most efficient members of the Const. Conv. of 1787, and was chiefly instrumental in securing the ratification of the Constitution by the State Conv. of Ct. His services to the country were invaluable. He was a man of great common sense, and, according to Jefferson, "never said a foolish thing in his life."

acad. founded by the State of La., resigning when the secession ordinance was passed in Jan. 1861. App. col. 13th U.S. Inf. May 14, he com. a brigade at the battle of Bull Run, July 21; was made brig.-gen. of vols. from May 17, and succeeded Gen. Anderson in com. of the dept. of Ky. Oct. 8, 1861. When asked by the sec. of war how many men he should require, he replied, "60,000 to drive the enemy from Ky., and 200,000 to finish the war in this section." His estimate was considered as wildly extravagant; and he was reported insane, and relieved from the com. Feb. 14, 1862, he took com. of the 5th division of Gen. Grant's Army of the Tenn. His services at Shiloh, Apr. 6–7, were thus acknowledged by Grant: "On the first day he held with raw troops the key-point of the landing. . . . To his individual efforts I am indebted for the success of that battle." He was wounded in the hand, and had three horses shot under him. Made maj.-gen. 1 May, and was prominent in the siege of Corinth. He com. at Memphis from July to Nov. 1862. In the Vicksburg campaign, which began in Dec., he com. the first division, and attempted, unsuccessfully (Dec. 27), to capture that place from the north side. He rendered important services in several battles preceding the siege, and com. one of the 3 corps which made an unsuccessful assault on the works, May 22. After the surrender of Vicksburg, 4 July, 1863, Sherman marched against Gen. Johnston, and occupied Jackson, from which the enemy were driven July 17. App. com. of the dept. of the Tenn. in Oct. 1863, he joined Grant at Chattanooga ab. Nov. 15; he occupied Mission. Ridge on the 24th; rendered valuable services at the battle of Chattanooga, Nov. 25; and immediately moved to the relief of Burnside, who was besieged at Knoxville. The enemy raised the siege, and fled on his approach. Arriving at Memphis in Jan. 1864, he marched from Vicksburg eastward, destroying the railroads; and, ab. Feb. 14, entered Meridian, destroying depots, arsenals, &c. App. in March, 1864, to com. the military division of the Mpi.; May 6, 1864, he moved from Chattanooga with the armies of the Cumberland, Tenn., and Ohio, numbering 98,797 men, with 254 cannon. Turning Johnston's position, the latter fell back to Resaca, whence, after a severe battle (May 15), he retreated to Alatoona. Sherman again turned his flank by moving to Dallas; fought him at Dallas and New-Hope Church about May 28, driving him upon the strong positions of Kenesaw, Pine, and Lost Mountains; June 27, he attacked the works at Kenesaw, but was repulsed with severe loss. Another flank movement caused Johnston's withdrawal across the Chattahoochee, July 3; and, July 17, he drove the enemy to Atlanta. Gen. Hood, having superseded Johnston, attacked Sherman 22 July, and was repulsed with great loss. Ab. Aug. 28 he gained victories at Jonesborough and Lovejoy's, forcing Hood to evacuate Atlanta Sept. 1. Hood then invaded Middle Tenn., opening the way for Sherman to march through Ga. to the sea. Abandoning his communications with Chattanooga, and leaving Atlanta in ruins, Sherman began his famous march, Nov. 16. with 66,000 men, moving in three columns; passed between Macon and Augusta, destroying railroads and other public property; and arrived at the outworks of Savannah, Dec. 10. His loss in this march was 63 killed and 245 wounded. He occupied Savannah Dec. 21; marched north-west Jan. 15, 1865; took Columbia, S.C., Feb. 17, compelling the enemy to evacuate Charleston; and moved by way of Cheraw and Fayetteville towards Goldsborough, N.C. He defeated the enemy at Averysborough, Mar. 16, and at Bentonville on the 18th; entered Goldsborough Mar. 23, and formed a junction with the army of Gen. Schofield. Apr. 17 he agreed with Gen. Johnston on a memorandum or basis of peace, which was disapproved by the pres. and cabinet. Apr. 26 Johnston surrendered at Durham Station, N.C., on the same terms as were granted to Lee; and the war ended. Made brig.-gen. U.S.A. 4 July, 1863; maj.-gen. 12 Aug. 1864; lieut.-gen. 25 July, 1866; gen.-in-chief of the army 4 Mar. 1869. — See Sherman and his Campaigns, Bowman and Irwin, 1865; Reid's Ohio in the War, 1868.

Simms, WM. GILMORE, LL.D., author, b. Charleston, S.C., Apr. 17, 1806; d. there June 11, 1870. His father was of Irish descent. At the age of 7 he began to write verses. Owing to the limited means of his family and a sickly childhood, his early education was slight. After a clerkship of several years in a store in Charleston, he at 18 began to study law. At 20 he m. Was adm. to the bar in 1828, which he quitted after a year's practice, and became editor, and part proprietor, of the Charleston City Gazette, which, favoring the Union during the nullification excitement, became a losing concern, and in 1832 left Mr. Simms nearly penniless. Losing by death, about this time, his grandmother, father, and wife, he came north, and passed the summer at Hingham, Ms., where he finished the longest and best of his imaginative poems "Atalantis" (N. Y. 1833). He had previously pub. a "Monody on the Death of Charles C. Pinckney," 1825; 2 vols. of Poems, and "Early Lays," 1827; "Vision of Cortes, Cain, and other Poems," 1829; and in 1830 "The Tricolor, or Three Days of Blood in Paris." His other poetical works are "Southern Passages and Pictures," 1839; "Donna Anna," 1843; "Grouped Thoughts and Scattered Fancies," 1845; "Lays of the Palmetto," 1848; "Poems," 2 vols. 1854; "Areytos, or Songs and Ballads of the South," 1860; and in 1867 edited "War Poetry of the South." He also produced two dramas, "Norman Maurice," and "Michael Bonham, or the Fall of the Alamo;" and adapted Shakspeare's "Timon of Athens" for the stage, with numerous additions of his own. He is best known by his romances, founded upon local or revol. history. His novels are "Martin Faber;" a mélange entitled "The Book of My Lady," 1833; "Carl Werner," 1838; "Confession, or the Blind Heart," 1842; "Castle Dismal," 1845; "The Wigwam and the Cabin," 1845–6; "Marie de Bernière," 1853; "The Yemassee," 1835; "Pelayo," 1838, and its sequel, "Count Julian," 1845; "The Damsel of Darien," 1845; "The Lily and the Totem," "The Maroon and Other Tales," 1855; "Vasconcelos," 1867; "The Cassique of Kiawah," 1860; "The Partisan," 1835; "Mellichampe," 1836, and "Katherine Walton," 1851; "The Scout," originally pub. as the "Kinsmen," 1841; "Woodcraft," originally entitled "The Sword and the Distaff," "The Forayers, a Raid of the Dogdays," 1855, and its Sequel, "Eutaw," 1856; "Guy Rivers," 1834; "Richard Hurdis," 1838; "Border Beagles," 1840; "Beauchampe," 1842; "Helen Halsey," 1845; "The Golden Christmas," 1852; and "Charlemont, or the Pride of the Village," 1856. His hist. and biog. works are a "Hist. of S.C.;" "S.C. in the Revol.," 1854; and Lives of Marion, Capt. John Smith, Chevalier Bayard, and Gen. Greene; also a "Geography of S.C.," and a number of articles on the "Civil Warfare of the South," and the "Amer. Loyalists of the Revol.," pub. in the South. Lit. Messenger and Quarterly Review. His other works are, "Views and Reviews in Amer. Literature;" "Egeria," a collection of aphorisms; "Father Abbot, or the Home Tourist, a Medley," "Southward Ho!" 1854; "The Morals of Slavery," &c. He also edited, with notes, the 7 dramas ascribed to Shakspeare, but not pub. among his works, under the title of "A Supplement to Shakspeare's Plays," and contrib. much to periodical literature, besides delivering occasional orations. Many of the biographies of South Carolinians in the New Amer. Cyclop. are from his pen. He resided on his plantation of woodlands near Midway, S.C. A uniform edition of his works was pub. by Redfield, in N.Y., in 19 vols.

Smith, GERRIT, philanthropist, b. Utica, N.Y., Mar. 6, 1797. Ham. Coll., N.Y., 1818. His father Peter left him one of the largest landed estates in the U.S., the management of which has been his principal occupation. In 1853 he was adm. to practice, and subsequently took part in several important trials. He early joined in the benevolent enterprises of his day, and in 1825 connected himself with the Amer. Colonization Society, to which he gave largely for the accomplishment of its objects; but in 1835 withdrew from it, and joined the American Antislavery Society. He has practically illustrated his opposition to land-monopoly by distributing 200,000 acres, partly among institutions of learning, but mostly among poor white and black men, in parcels of ab. 50 acres. His largest gifts of money have been in aid of emancipation, and to buy homes for the poor. In 1852 he was a member of Congress. He was long a prominent advocate, with both tongue and pen, of a larger liberty of opinion, and freedom from what he believed the bondage of sect. In 1861 he made some speeches in behalf of a vigorous and uncompromising prosecution of the existing war, and also wrote many articles to this end for the press. He has pub. many speeches and addresses. A vol. of his speeches in Congress was pub. in 1856, and in 1861 another, entitled "Sermons and Speeches by Gerrit Smith;" also "Theologics," 8vo, 1866; "Nature the Base of a Free Theology," 1867; "Religion of Reason," 1864. M.C. in 1791–7 and 1801–3. Removed to Rutland; was again a representative; was chief justice of the Supreme Court in 1797; and was U.S. senator in 1803–7. Member of the convention that adopted the Federal Constitution in 1791.

Smith, Col. James, a signer of the Decl. of Indep., b. Ireland ab. 1720; d. July 11, 1806, York, Pa. His father, whom he had accomp. to America in 1729, was a farmer on the Susquehanna. James, the second son, was educated at the Coll. of Phila., studied law, was adm. to the bar, and settled near Shippensburg as a lawyer and surveyor, but afterwards removed to York where he continued the practice of his profession during the remainder of his life. In 1774 he raised the first vol. company in the State for the purpose of resisting Great Britain; and was a member of the convention to consider the expediency of abstaining from importing any goods from Eng., and also of assembling a General Congress. At this meeting he was one of the com. to prepare instructions for the representatives; and these "instructions," together with Smith's "Essay on the Constitutional Power of Great Britain over the Colonies in America," gave the first strong impulse to the cause of the Revolution in that region. Member of the Pa. conv. of Jan. 1775; was also a member of the Prov. Conf. which assembled on the 18th of June ensuing to form a new govt. for Pa., and seconded the resolution moved by Dr. Rush in favor of a decl. of indep. It was unanimously adopted, signed by the members, and presented to Congress a few days only before the Decl. of Indep. July 15, a convention, of which Col. Smith was a member, was assembled in Phila. for the pur pose of forming a new constitution for the State; on the 20th of the same month he was elected a member of Congress, and remained in that body until Nov. 1778; in 1780 he was member of the Gen. Assembly of Pa. He was a man of great wit, and possessed of an original species of drollery, which was heightened by an uncouthness of gesture, a certain ludicrous cast of countenance, and a drawling mode of utterance.

Smith, Col. James, pioneer, b. Franklin Co., Pa., 1737; d. Washington Co., Ky., 1812. At 18 he was taken by the Indians and adopted by them, but escaped in 1759. His subsequent adventures as a leader of the Blackboys in 1763 and '65, his service as a lieut. in Bouquet's exped. in 1764, his exploring excursion into Southern Ky. in 1766, and his services in the Revol. war, in which he held the rank of col., are detailed in his "Remarkable Occurrences in the Life and Travels of Col. James Smith," Lexington, Ky., 1799. He settled in Cane Ridge, near Paris, Ky., in 1788; was a member of the conv. at Danville; and afterward represented Bourbon Co. in the Gen. Assembly of the State. One of his best works is on the "Natural History of the Fishes of Ms.," 1833. He has also pub. a class-book of anatomy; "Pilgrimage to Egypt," 1852; "Turkey and the Turks," 1852; "Mechanism of the Eye;" "Pilgrimage to Palestine," 1851; editor Medical World, 1857, 2 vols. 8vo. He was port-physician of Boston in 1826–49, member of the legisl. in 1837 and '48, and mayor of Boston 1854.

Smith, Capt. John, founder of Virginia, b. Willoughby, Lincolnshire, Eng.; baptized 6 Jan., 1579–80; d. Lond. 21 June, 1631. Son of George, who d. ab. 1593. His parents sent him to the free schools of Alford and Louth. For a short time he was in a counting-house at Lynn; but with 10 shillings, furnished by his friends, as he says, "to get rid of him," he went with a son of Lord Willoughby to France; served in the Low-Country wars 4 years, and then returned home. His love of adventure took him a second time to the Low Countries, where he determined to join the armies fighting the Turks. In 1601 he joined the army of Baron Kissell, which was endeavoring to relieve the garrison of a Transylvanian town besieged by 20,000 Turks. Smith contrived to open communication with the besieged. A combined assault was successful; and he was rewarded with the command of 250 horse under Count Meldritch. In a subsequent combat he was severely wounded; and in another siege he successively slew 3 Turks in single combat. For his exploits he was made a major, and received from the Prince of Transylvania a patent of nobility and a pension of 300 ducats. Later in the war, he was wounded, captured, and sent a slave to Constantinople. Having killed his master, who had grossly insulted him, he fled, attired in his master's clothes, and, after many adventures, reached Eng. ab. 1604. Smith next embarked in Newport's exped. to Va., which sailed Dec. 19, 1606. Incurring the enmity of some of his associates, he was charged with conspiracy, and kept prisoner during the remainder of the voyage. After landing, although Smith was named one of the council, he was excluded on the charge of sedition. Notwithstanding all this, he devoted himself to the interests of the Colony. Along with Newport, he headed a party sent to discover the source of the James. Strong in the affections of the colonists, and in his innocence, he demanded a trial, which resulted in his triumphant acquittal, and his taking his place in the council. Ratcliff succeeded the deposed Wingfield as pres.; but Smith became the real head of the Colony, and to his almost unaided efforts the salvation of the infant settlement was owing. He set about the building of Jamestown, and made frequent excursions into the country for corn. He prevented the escape of Wingfield, Kendall, and other malecontents to Eng. by a resort to arms. He states that in one of his expeds. he was taken by the Indians, and that his life was saved through the interference of Pocahontas. This story is now generally disbelieved. (See Charles Deane's Introd. to Smith's "True Relation.") In June–July, 1608, Smith made a survey of Chesapeake Bay as far as the mouth of the Patapsco. He again explored the bay, returning Sept. 7; having sailed 3,000 miles, and from his surveys constructed an accurate map, still extant. Sept. 10 he was inaug. pres. of the Colony. The men were regularly drilled in military exercises; and buildings were repaired or erected. Every man was obliged to labor 6 hours a day. In order to prevent an apprehended deficiency of corn, he made an ineffectual attempt to seize the person of Powhatan. In this enterprise he encountered great peril, and was nearly poisoned. Having been severely burned by the explosion of a bag of gunpowder, and feeling the need of surgical skill, and tired of struggling with malicious enemies, he returned to Eng. in the autumn of 1609. In Mar. 1614 he sailed from Lond. with 2 ships for trade and discovery in N. England. He returned in August, and gave to Prince Charles a map of the country between the Penobscot and Cape Cod. In March, 1615, he sailed again, intending a permanent settlement, but was taken by a French man-of-war, and carried to Rochelle, but escaped from the ship, and returned to Eng. While on board this ship, which was really a pirate, he wrote an account of his voyages to N. Eng., which was pub. in 1616; and he distributed the work in the west of Eng. himself. The Plymouth Company created him admiral of New Eng. He passed the rest of his life in Eng. Smith spared neither time nor labor to advance the colonization of America. His was an enthusiastic, determined, and uncompromising spirit; and this made him many enemies. Author of "A True Relation of Va.," 1608, repub. with introd. and notes by Charles Deane, Boston, 1866; "Map of Va.," &c., 1612; "N. England's Trials," &c., 1620; "Pathway to Experience," 1626; a "Sea Grammar," 1627; "The Generall Historie of Virginia, New England, and the Summer Isles," 1624; "The True Travels, Adventures, and Observations of Capt. Son of Robert, D.D., and studied theology with a bro., Samuel Stanhope, then pres. of Hampden-Sid. Coll.; and in 1779 succeeded him in that position. He became celebrated as a preacher in the Valley of Va. Dr. Alexander thus pictures him in the midst of the revival-scenes of his time: "In person he was about the middle size; his hair was uncommonly black, and was divided on the top, and fell down on each side of the face; a large blue eye, of open expression, was so piercing, that it was common to say Dr. Smith looked you through." In Dec. 1791 he was called to the Third Presb. Church, Phila., and thence to the presidency of Un. Coll. upon its foundation in 1795; but in May, 1799, returned to his former charge in Phila., where he soon after died of the epidemic then raging. — Sprague.

Here he pub. in 1830 "The Book of Mormon, an Account written by the Hand of Mormon upon Plates taken from the Plates of Nephi." Smith professed to have translated this English version from the original plates (discovered to him by angels), Oliver Cowdery acting as his scribe. This "divine revelation" is a corrupt version of a religious romance ("The Manuscript Found") by Solomon Spaulding, written in 1809, and left in MS. by him. The "Late Revelations" are in a vol. entitled "Doctrines and Covenants of the Latter-day Saints." Having made some converts, he removed with them to Kirtland, O., in 1831, and afterward to Independence, Mo., whence they were expelled in 1838. They then founded in Illinois the town of Nauvoo, where they began to build a great temple in 1841. Smith amassed a large fortune, took the title of lieut.-gen. and pres. of the church, and exercised absolute authority over the "saints." Popular indignation having been aroused by his acts, he was arrested, and confined in jail at Carthage. The jail was broken into by a mob, and Smith was killed. — *See Autob. of Joseph Smith; J. B. Smith, Gen. Samuel, Revol. officer, b. Carlisle, Pa., July 27, 1752; d. April 22, 1839. His father John Smith, who removed to Baltimore in 1760, was several years a member of the legisl.; member of the Md. Const. Conv. of 1776; and during nearly the whole war was chairman of the com. of ways and means in the house of delegates. Samuel received the rudiments of his education at Carlisle; then attended school in Baltimore, and afterwards in Elkton. Until 1771 he was in his father's counting-room, when he visited Europe in one of his father's vessels. Early in the struggle for liberty he joined a vol. company, and in Jan. 1776 was app. a capt. in Smallwood's regt., which, at the battle on Long Island, did eminent service, and lost one-third of its men. Disting. at Harlem and White Plains, where he was slightly wounded; and, in the harassing retreat through N.J., he was, Dec. 10, 1776, given a major's commission in Gist's batt.; made lieut.-col. of the 4th (Md.) Regt. in 1777, and was at the attack on Staten Island and at Brandywine. Immediately afterwards he was detached by Washington to the defence of Fort Mifflin. In this naked and exposed work he maintained himself, under a continual cannonade, from Sept. 26 to Nov. 11, when he was so severely wounded as to make it necessary to remove him to the Jersey shore. For this gallant defence, Congress voted him thanks and an elegant sword. Not entirely recovered from the effects of his wound, he yet took part in the hardships of Valley Forge. He took an active part in the battle of Monmouth. Reduced, after a service of three years and a half, from affluence to poverty, he was compelled to resign his commission, but continued to do duty as a col. of militia until the end of the war. Several years a member of the legisl.; he was a member of Congress either in the house or senate, where his services were of the utmost importance, from 1793 to 1833. Under Mr. Jefferson he served a short time as sec. of the navy, though declining the app. He was a brig.-gen. of militia, and served as maj.-gen. of the State troops in the defence of Baltimore in the war of 1812, the success of which was eminently due to his talents and knowledge. In the summer of 1835, when in his 83d year, a com. of his fellow-citizens having called on him to put down a fearful mob which had possession of the city, he at once consented to make the attempt, was successful, and was elected mayor of the city.

Solis, Antonio de, a Spanish poet and historian, b. Alcala de Henares, 18 July, 1610; d. Madrid 19 Apr. 1686. He studied law at Salamanca, but, devoting himself to literature, produced a comedy at 17, and acquired some repute as a poet. App. in 1632 to a lucrative office under the sec. of state, he became, after the death of Philip IV., historiographer of the Indies, but took orders in the Church in 1667, and d. poor. His "Historia de la Conquista de Mexico" (fol. Madrid, 1684) concluded with the subjugation of the Mexicans, that he might not have to record the subsequent cruelties of his countrymen. An Eng. translation was pub. in 1724; and another, by Townshend, 3 vols. 8vo, Lond., 1809. His plays were collected and pub. at Madrid in 1732.

Somers, Richard, a brave naval officer, b. Egg Harbor, N. J., 1778; d. Sept. 4, 1804. Son of Col. Richard of the Revol. army, who d. 1794. Educated at a school in Phila. and at the Burlington Acad. He went to sea in 1794; became a midshipm. in the navy in 1798; lieut. in 1801; and was at his death a master-com. In 1803 he com. the schooner "Nautilus," in Com. Preble's squadron, in the Medit., and bore a disting. part in the several attacks on the Tripolitan gunboats; himself leading one of the attacking divisions, and Decatur the other. He vol. to take the "Ketch Intrepid," fitted up as a fireship, into the harbor of Tripoli, and with his brave comrades lost his life by its premature explosion.

Sommers, Charles G., D.D., b. London, 1791; d. N.Y. City, Dec. 19, 1868. He came in 1802 to the U.S.; was in 1811 in the employ of John Jacob Astor, but soon turned his attention to the ministry, in which he labored over 50 years. He was active in mission and reform work under the auspices of the Tract Society and the Bible Societies; founded the American Baptist Home-Mission Society, and, in connection with Rev. Mr. Griffiths, established the first Sunday school in America, upon the plan of Robert Raikes, in Division St. He pub. some controversial papers in defence of his sect, edited a vol. of psalms and hymns, and 3 vols. of the Baptist Library, and a Memoir of John Stanford, D.D., with selections from his Correspondence, 1835.

Sonntag, George, admiral in the Russian navy, b. Phila. 1786; d. Odessa, Russia, 23 Mar. 1841. Son of Wm. Lewis Sonntag, a French officer, who came to the U.S. during the Revol. war, and subsequently established a mercantile house in Phila. George went to Russia in 1815; was in the allied army at the entry into Paris, and attained the grade of admiral, and of a gen. in the Russian army, by his talent, energy, and intrepidity.

Sothern, Edward Askew ("Douglas Stewart"), b. Liverpool, Eng., Apr. 1, 1830. Made his first appearance in Jersey, Eng.; became stage-manager for Charles Poole. Made his début in Boston at the National, as Dr. Pangloss, Sept. 1852; at Laura Keene's Theatre, N.Y., May 12, 1858, and there made his great hit as Dundreary, in "Our American Cousin," — a play remodelled by him.

He performed this character at the Haymarket, London, from Nov. 11, 1861, for 496 times; but was not successful in it at Paris, where he opened July 8, 1867.

Soublette, CARLOS, Venezuelan statesman; d. Caraccas, 12 Feb. 1870, a. ab. 70. He distng. himself in the war for So. American independence; had been sec. of war, of state, of foreign affairs, and of finance. Pres. of Venezuela in 1842–6, and had been also ambassador to Eng., France, and Spain.

Soule, CAROLINE A., b. Albany, N.Y., 1824. Author of "Memoir of Rev. H. B. Soule, 1852; "Home-Life," 1854; "The Pet of the Settlement," 1860; "Wine or Water," 1862; edited the Rose-Bud 1854–5; co-editor of Ladies' Depository 1856–62; and contrib. to mags. and papers.

Soule, JOSHUA, D.D., bishop of the M.E. Church south, b. Bristol, Me., Aug. 1, 1781; d. Nashville, Tenn., Mar. 6, 1867. Licensed to preach in 1798; ord. elder in 1802; app. in 1804 presiding. elder of the Me. dist.; and at the gen. conf. at Baltimore, 1808, drew up the constitution of the plan then adopted for a delegated gen. conf. In 1816 he was chosen book-agent, and editor of the Meth Mag.; in 1820 was elected to, but declined, the episcopate; had charge of the N.Y. City station in 1821, and that of Baltimore in 1822–3; in 1824 he was re-elected and ord. bishop; he was delegate to the British Wesl. Meth. Conf. in 1842, and afterward travelled extensively in the British islands and in France. On the division of the church, Bishop Soule adhered to the southern portion, and changed his place of residence from Lebanon, O., to Nashville, Tenn. In 1853–4, he made an episcopal tour in Cal. Until forced by age and infirmity to retire from active business, he was "abundant in labors," scorning ease and self-indulgence.

Soule (soo'-lā'), PIERRE, lawyer and senator, b. Castillon, in the Pyrenees, 1801; d. N. Orleans, 16 Mar. 1870. Son of a lieut.-gen. in the Republican armies, who afterward filled the office of judge, previously hereditary in the family. Destined for the Church, he was sent in 1816 to the Jesuits' Coll. at Toulouse, and completed his studies at Bordeaux. At the age of 15 he took part in a conspiracy against the Bourbons, and, the plot having been discovered, he was obliged to conceal himself, and for more than a year followed the occupation of a shepherd. Permitted to return, he went to Paris, and, in conjunction with Barthelemy and Méry, established a paper advocating republican sentiments. Placed on trial for a bitter attack upon the ministry, his advocate appealed to the clemency of the court in behalf of the prisoner on the score of his youth. This line of defence did not suit Soulé, who rose from his seat, and addressed the court, denying the criminality of his opinions and conduct. His eloquence did not save him from St. Pelagie, whence he escaped to Eng. He afterward came to Baltimore, and in the fall of 1825 removed to N. Orleans. Having determined to make the law his profession, he applied himself assiduously to the study of Eng., passed his examination for the bar in that language, was adm., and soon rose to great eminence in the profession. In 1847 he was elected a U.S. senator to fill a vacancy, and was re-elected in 1849 for 6 years. He took extreme Southern ground, and was a frequent participant in the debates upon the compromise measures of 1850. In 1853 he was app. by Pres. Pierce minister to Spain. He was soon involved in a quarrel with M. Turgot, the French ambassador, whom he severely wounded in a duel. He lent his influence to the revol. outbreak of Aug. 1854 in Madrid, and was led, by his peculiar views on the subject of the acquisition of Cuba by the U.S., to exceed instructions, and to withhold a treaty for reciprocity of trade between the U.S. and Cuba which had been concluded by our sec. of legation at Madrid during the temporary absence of the minister. He joined in the Ostend Conference in 1854, returned to the U.S. in 1855, and is understood to have opposed the secession of La. In 1862 he was arrested in N. Orleans for disloyalty to the govt., and confined some months in Fort Lafayette, but was released on condition that he would leave the country. He returned to N. Orleans a few months before his death.

Soulouque (soo-look'), FAUSTIN, a Haytien general, and emperor under the title of FAUSTIN I., b. in the southern part of St. Domingo in 1789; d. Jamaica, W.I., Aug. 6, 1867. A slave by birth, he was freed by the decree of 1790; took part in the negro insurrection against the French in 1803; served as capt. under Boyer in 1820, as col. under Herard in 1844, as brig.-gen. under Guerrier in 1845; and com. a division at the time of the death of Riché in 1846. While the generals Souffran and Paul were disputing and plotting for the succession, the senate unexpectedly elected Soulouque to the presidency, March 1, 1847. He belonged to the mulatto party; but, jealous of their power, he began to attach the blacks to his interest, and to pursue a system of terror toward the citizens, who were decimated in 1848 by confiscations, proscriptions, and execution. He attempted, unsuccessfully, to subjugate the republic of St. Domingo. In 1849 he caused the restoration of the empire, ostensibly by the will of the people; was chosen emperor (Aug. 26); surrounded himself with a numerous court; and issued a constitution, reserving to himself, however, the right at any juncture to rule as he pleased. He was crowned with great pomp, Apr. 18, 1852, imitating on the occasion the ceremonial at the coronation of Napoleon I. In 1855, while repeating his attempt to conquer St. Domingo with 10,000 men, he was completely defeated by Santana. He was also defeated in the next campaign. A commercial crisis in 1858 increased the general discontent, and Gen. Geffrard, an enterprising mulatto, led a rebellion, and was recognized as pres. of the republic of Hayti by the clerk and officials. Soulouque took refuge, Jan. 15, 1859, on board a British frigate, and afterward resided in Jamaica.

Southard, SAMUEL LEWIS, LL.D. (U. of Pa. 1832), an eminent lawyer and statesman, b. Basking Ridge, N. J., June 9, 1787; d. Fredericksburg, Va., June 26, 1842. N. J. Coll. 1804. Son of Henry, Revol. soldier and M.C.

Ch. 1836; bishop of Constantinople 1844–50; elected bishop of Cal. in 1850, but declined; rector of St. Mark's, Portland, 1851–2; of the Ch. of the Advent, Boston, 1852–8. Horatio his father, a lawyer of Portland (b. Scarborough, Me., 1781; register of probate for Cumb. Co. 1815–36), pub. in 1830 "The Probate Manual." The son is the author of "Tour in Armenia, Kurdistan," &c., 1841, 2 vols. 8vo; "Practical Directions for Lent," 1850; "Visit to the Church of Mesopotamia," &c., 12mo, 1844; "The War in the East," 1855; "Parochial Sermons," 1859; also of some pamphlets, and contribs. to periodicals.

Southwick, SOLOMON, editor and politician, b. R.I. ab. 1774; d. Albany, N.Y., Nov. 18, 1839. He was brought up to the trade of a baker; but, after having been a journeyman-printer in Albany, about the beginning of the century he became sole editor of the Albany Register, which under his management became the leading Repub. or Democ. paper in the State; but Mr. Southwick quarrelled with his party, and alienated his friends, and the Register died in 1817. He afterwards entered into numerous wild speculations, and finally became bankrupt. Though a fatalist in religion, he nevertheless established a religious paper called the Christian Visitant, which, in addition to his political paper, he edited with talent; also, for a time, carrying on an agricultural paper called the Ploughboy, which died from want of support. He afterward prepared an able course of lectures in behalf of the temperance cause, another upon biblical literature, and another upon self-education, which he delivered extensively throughout the State.

Southworth, EMMA D. E. (NEVITTE), novelist, b. Washington, D.C., Dec. 26, 1818. She was married in 1841, and in 1843 was obliged to resort to her pen for support, and made her début as a writer in the National Era, a newspaper of Washington, to which she became a regular contrib. of tales and sketches. Her first novel, "Retribution," written while engaged in school-teaching in Washington, appeared in 1849. She has since produced "The Deserted Wife," Shannondale," "The Curse of Clifton," "The Lost Heiress," "The Discarded Daughter," and many others, which have attained considerable popularity. Her novels display strong dramatic power, and contain many excellent descriptive passages of the Southern life and scenery to which they are chiefly devoted. In 1853 she removed to a charming villa on the Potomac Heights, near Georgetown; and has since been engaged as a regular contributor to the N. Y. Ledger.

Southworth, NATHANIEL, miniature-painter, b. Scituate, Ms., 1806; d. Dorchester, Apr. 25, 1858. He early manifested talent in drawing, and, establishing himself in Boston, ranked as one of the best in his dept. of the art. His likenesses were characterized by accuracy in drawing and great delicacy in execution. After visiting Europe in 1848, he practised his profession in New York and Philadelphia.

Sower, CHRISTOPHER, printer and publisher of Phila., b. Germany; d. Sept. 1758. He pub. in 1739 a quarterly journal in German, — the first of its kind in a foreign language issued in Pa.; established the first type-foundry and printers'-ink manuf. in the country; and in 1743 printed a German quarto Bible. He possessed great influence among his countrymen, frequently acting as their representative in their intercourse with the govt. About 1744 he resigned his business to his son CHRISTOPHER, b. Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, Sept. 26, 1721, d. Aug. 1784. He emigrated with his father to Pa. in 1726, and conducted by far the most extensive book-manuf. then, and for many years subsequently, established in America. He is supposed to be the inventor of cast-iron stoves, and it is certain that he introduced the use of them. He was noted for philanthropy, and during the Revol. distributed flour and potatoes by the wagon-load among the destitute families of the militia in service. He was subsequently known as "Das Brod-Vater," — the bread-father. The Revol. broke up his establishment; and, taking part with the loyalists, his estate was confiscated.

Spaight, RICHARD D., gov. of N.C. 1792–5; killed in a duel with John Stanley, Sept. 5, 1802. He commenced his academic studies in Ireland, and completed them at the U. of Glasgow. He joined the Amer. army in 1778 as aide to Gen. Caswell, and was at the battle of Camden in 1780. In 1781 he entered the house of commons of N.C.; in 1782–4 was a member of the Cont. Congress, also in 1785–6; was one of the delegates to frame the U.S. Constitution; in 1792 he was again elected to the local legisl.; M.C. 1798–1701, after which he was elected to the State senate.

Spaight, RICHARD DOBBS, lawyer and statesman, son of the preceding, b. Newbern, N.C., 1796; d. there Nov. 1850. U. of N.C. 1815. Member of the house in 1819; of the State senate in 1820–2; M.C. 1823–4; again a State senator in 1824–34; and in 1835–7 was

Spalding, RUFUS PAINE, lawyer, and M.C. 1863–9, b. West Tisbury, Ms., May 3, 1798. Y. C. 1817. He removed with his parents to Ct. when very young; m. a dau. of Judge Zeph. Swift; settled as a lawyer in Trumbull Co., O., in 1821; was elected to the legisl. in 1839; re-elected in 1841, and chosen speaker; judge of the Ohio Sup. Ct. from Feb. 1849 to Feb. 1852; and afterwards practised law in Cleveland.

Spalding, SOLOMON, author of the "Book of Mormon," b. Ashford, Ct., 1761; d. Amity, Washington County, Pa., 1816. Dartm. Coll. 1785. He had been a soldier in the Revol. army; became a licentiate of the Windham (Ct.) Cong. Assoc. Oct. 9, 1787; preached 8 or 10 years, when he was ord. an evangelist, but did not settle, owing to ill-health. While residing in Salem, Ohio, about 1812, he wrote a work of fiction suggested by the opening of a mound in which were discovered human bones, and some relics indicative of a former civilized race: he entitled it "The Manuscript Found." About 1814 he went to Pittsburg, Pa., where he was followed by Sidney Rigdon, then a printer, and afterward a noted Mormon. He told his employer of Spalding's novel, who borrowed the manuscript, and offered to print it. His widow returned to New York with it; but it was afterwards stolen from her. The uniform testimony of those who read the work is, that the basis, and in great part the form thereof, now constitute the Mormon Bible. — Hist. Mag., Aug. 1869; Alumni D.C.

Spangenberg, AUGUSTUS GOTTLIEB, Ph. D. (Jena, 1726), a Moravian bishop, b. Klettenberg, Germany, 15 July, 1704; d. near Hernhutt, 18 Sept. 1792. The son of a clergyman. He aided in establishing near Jena free schools for poor children; became in 1731 a prof. in the U. of Halle, and assist. supt. of Francke's Orphan House; and, joining the Moravians in 1733, was a missionary to the W. Indies and North America in 1735–9. He established a colony in Ga., and received a grant of land, a part of which is within the present limits of Savannah. He preached to the Germans of Pa.; and his report on the state of religion there induced his church to found the town of Bethlehem; made a bishop in 1745. He was again in America in 1744–9, and a third time in 1751–June, 1762. He made frequent journeys to the Indian country; was adopted by the Oneidas, and was highly respected by the Indians. A large tract of land in Western N.C. was bought in 1752, and a pioneer church planted there. During the French and Indian war of 1755–62, Bethlehem became the frontier post, and was stockaded and guarded by the Christian Indians, thus affording protection to the country south of it. On the death of Zinzendorff in 1760, he was called to the supreme council of the sect, and in 1764 app. supreme inspector in Upper Alsatia. Made in 1789 pres. of the gen. directory. Author of "Biography of Zinzendorff," 1772–5, 8 vols. 8vo, and "Idea Fidei Fratrum," 8vo, 1779.

Sparks, JARED, LL.D. (H. U. 1843), historian, b. Willington, Ct., May 10, 1789; d. Cambridge, Ms., March 14, 1866. H.U. 1815. Tutor 1817–19. His youth was passed in agric. and mechanical occupations. During his college course he taught for a time a small private school at Havre de Grace, Md., and while there served in the militia called out to repel an anticipated attack by the British. He studied theology at Camb.; and also became one of the conductors of the N. A. Review, of which he was sole proprietor and editor in 1823–30. From May 5, 1819, until 1823, when his health became impaired, he was a Unitarian minister in Baltimore. In 1821 he was elected chaplain to the house of representatives; McLean prof. of history at H. U. in 1839–49; and pres. in 1849–52; in 1857 he made a European tour with his family, and afterward resided in Cambridge. He pub. in 1820 "Letters on the Ministry, Ritual, and Doctrine of the Prot.-Ep. Church;" "Unitarian Miscellany and Christian Monitor," 1821–3; "Comparative Moral Tendency of Trinitarian and Unitarian Doctrines," 1823; "Essays and Tracts on Theology," 6 vols. 1826; "Life of John Ledyard," 1828; "The Writings of George Washington, with a Life," 12 vols. 8vo, 1834–7; "The Diplomatic Corresp. of the Amer. Revol.," 12 vols. 8vo, 1829–30; "The Life of Gouverneur Morris," 3 vols. 8vo, 1832; "The American Almanac," 1830; "Library of Amer. Biog.," 25 vols. 18mo, 1834–8 and 1844–8; "The Works of Benjamin Franklin, with a Life," 10 vols. 8vo, 1840. His long and important labors in illustration of American history were closed in 1854 by his "Corresp. of the Amer. Revol.," 4 vols. 8vo, 1854. His historical writings evince thorough research, candid judgment, dispassionate criticism, and accuracy and simplicity of style. In 1852 he printed two pamphlets in defence of his mode of editing the Writings of Washington, in reply to the strictures of Lord Mahon and others; and a similar pamphlet in 1853, occasioned by a reprint of the original letters from Washington to Joseph Reed. His "Washington" cost him 9 years of labor, including researches in 1828 in the archives of London and Paris, then opened for the first time for historical purposes, and the personal examination of the Revol. papers in the public offices of the original 13 States and the dept. at Washington. He also secured the possession of all the Washington papers at Mt. Vernon. To his series of Biography he contrib. Lives of Ethan Allen, Marquette, Arnold, De La Salle, Pulaski, Ribault, Charles Lee, and Ledyard. A Memoir of Sparks, by G. E. Ellis, D.D., was pub. 1869.

Spear, Charles, Universalist minister, b. Boston; d. Washington, D.C., 1863. His labors in behalf of prisoners were constant, visiting them, and, after their release, aiding them to obtain employment. Spence, Robert Traill, capt. U.S.N., b. Portsmouth, N. H.; d. near Baltimore, 26 Sept. 1826. Midshipm. 15 May, 1800; lieut. 17 Feb. 1807; com. 24 July, 1813; captain 28 Feb. 1815. He served under Preble in the attack on Tripoli, July–Sept. 1804.

Spencer, Ambrose, LL.D. (H.U. 1821), politician and jurist, b. Salisbury, Ct., Dec. 13, 1765; d. Lyons, N.Y., March 13, 1848. H.U. 1783. The son of a farmer and mechanic. Educated, together with his bro. Philip, at Yale and at Harvard. He studied law with John Canfield of Sharon, Ct., whose dau. he m. before he was 19, and settled in Hudson, N.Y. In 1786 he was app. clerk of that city; in 1793 he was elected a member of the Assembly; in 1795 he was elected to the senate for 3 years, and in 1798 was re-elected for 4 years. He was the author of a bill, which became a law, meliorating the criminal code, and authorizing the erection of a State prison near New York. It abolished the punishment of death in all cases but treason and murder, and substituted imprisonment and hard labor. In 1796 he was app. assist. atty.-gen.; atty.-gen. in 1802–4; and in 1804 he received the app. of a justice of the Supreme Court, of which he was chief justice in 1819–23. Though a laborious and eminent lawyer, Judge Spencer never failed to take the most lively interest in politics. He was the warm friend of De Witt Clinton, but separated from him on the question of the war of 1812. In 1812 he was active in the struggle to prevent the charter of the six-million bank. Member of the State Const. Conv. in 1821; resumed for a while the practice of his profession at Albany; and was subsequently employed in various public duties, particularly that of mayor of Albany; M.C. 1829–31. In 1839 he removed to the village of Lyons. In 1844 he presided at the Whig Nat. Convention, held at Baltimore. While in Congress, the difficulty with the Cherokee Indians enlisted in their behalf his warmest sympathies, and he united with Wirt and other philanthropists in the vain endeavor to arrest the moustrous injustice of our government.

In 1809 he m., and opened a law-office in Canandaigua, whence in 1845 he removed to Albany. Becoming at the age of 19 private sec. to Gov. Tompkins, from that time until his last illness he was prominent in public affairs. In 1811 he was made master in chancery; in 1813 brigade judge-advocate in active service on the frontier; in 1814 postmaster of Canandaigua; in 1815 assistant atty.-gen. for the western part of the State; and was M.C. from 1817 to 1819. While there, as one of the com. to examine into the affairs of the U.S. Bank, he drew up its report. When, 15 years afterwards, the final struggle came, and Gen. Jackson was using the means furnished to his hand by this report, Mr. Spencer was found among the friends of the bank. In 1819–20 he was a member of the Assembly, and was speaker in 1820; State senator in 1824–8; in 1827 he was app. by Gov. Clinton one of the board to revise the statutes of New York, and took an important part in the performance of that laborious and responsible task. Joining the anti-Masonic party, he was app. special atty.-gen. under the law passed for that purpose, to prosecute those connected with the alleged abduction of Morgan, but resigned in May, 1830, having, meanwhile, involved himself in a controversy with Gov. Throop. In 1832 he was again elected to the Assembly; in 1839–41 he was sec. of state, and supt. of common schools; in Oct. 1841 he was made sec. of war by Pres. Tyler; and in March, 1843, was transferred to the treasury dept., but resigned in 1844 from his opposition to the annexation of Texas, and afterward devoted himself to the practice of his profession. The organization of the State asylum for idiots, and the improvement of the common-school system of the State, were, to a very considerable extent, due to him. He edited the first American edition of De Tocqueville's "Democracy in America," with an original preface and notes.

Spencer, Gen. Joseph, b. East Haddam, Ct., 1714; d. there Jan. 13, 1789. Judge of probate in 1753; joined the Northern army in 1758 as major under Col. Standish, MILES, an early New-Eng. soldier, b. Lancashire, Eng., ab. 1584; d. Duxbury, Ms., Oct. 3, 1656. He had served in the Netherlands. Came to Plymouth with the first company in 1620; and was chosen capt. by the Pilgrims, though not of their church. He was small in stature, but of a very hot and angry temper; possessed great courage, energy, and determination; and rendered important services to the early settlers. Sent in 1623 to Weymouth to protect the inhabitants from a conspiracy of the Indians, he seized their chief, Pecksuot, snatched his knife from his neck, and killed him with it. This and similar exploits filled the savages with a wholesome terror of him, and gave security to the colonists. In 1625 he went to Eng. as agent for the Colony, and returned with supplies in 1626. He then settled in Duxbury, where he was a magistrate for the rest of his life. — See his Will in Geneal. Reg., v. 335.

Stanford, JOHN, D.D., Baptist clergyman and philanthropist, b. Wandsworth, Eng., Oct. 20, 1754; d. New York, Jan. 14, 1834. He studied medicine; then engaged in teaching at Hammersmith, near London; and, after joining the Baptist Church, came in 1786 to the U.S.; spent some months at Norfolk, Va., and then opened an acad. at New York; pastor of the Baptist church in Providence, R.I., in 1787–9; again a teacher in New York in Nov. 1789–1813; and in 1791 commenced a course of Sunday-evening lectures. A Baptist church having been formed, through his exertions, in 1794, he officiated as its pastor until ab. 1800; in 1811 he became chaplain of the almshouse; and ultimately the prisons, hospitals, and charitable asylums of the city became his field of labor. He also taught classes of theol. students. Besides a "History of the First Baptist Church of Providence," he wrote a number of tracts, addresses, and discourses; a coll. of essays entitled "The Aged Christian's Companion," 1829; "Domestic Chaplain," 1806; "Description of New-York City," 1814. — See Memoir by C. G. Sommers.

Stanley, J. M., portrait-painter, b. Canandaigua, N.Y., 1814; removed to Michigan in 1834. Began his profession in Detroit in 1835, and has practised it in various places, travelling extensively among the Indians, taking the likenesses of the principal chiefs. In 1851–63 he resided in Washington, D.C. His extensive collection of Indian portraits and miscellaneous pictures were for many years a chief attraction of the Smithsonian Inst., where they were in Jan. 1865 unfortunately destroyed by fire. Now (1871) resides in Detroit.

Stansbury, Maj. Howard, b. N.Y. City, Feb. 8, 1806; d. Madison, Wis., April 17, 1863. App. 1st lieut. topog. engrs. July 7, 1838; capt. July, 1840; maj. Sept. 28, 1861. Prior to his entry into the eng. corps, he was engaged in various surveys of Western rivers, and in 1835 had charge of a number of public works in Indiana. In 1841 he was engaged on a survey of the lakes; in 1842–5 he was in charge of the survey of the harbor of Portsmouth, N.H., — a work which, for minute accuracy of detail, is unsurpassed in this country; in 1847 he was charged with the construction of an iron lighthouse on Carysfort Reef, Florida, the largest lighthouse on our coast; in 1849–51 he was engaged in the Great Salt-Lake exped., his report of which gave him a wide reputation; in 1852–3 he was engaged upon the lake harbors; in 1856 he was assigned to the charge of the military roads in Minnesota; at the time of his death, he was mustering and disbursing officer at Madison.

Stansbury, Gen. Tobias E., b. 1756; d. Baltimore Co., Md., Oct. 25, 1849. From the opening events of the Revol. war, down to within a few years of his death, he participated actively in national and state affairs; was repeatedly a member of the legisl., and presided as speaker of the house of delegates; brig.-gen. of Md. militia 1813–14; com. a brigade in battle of Bladensburg and in defence of Baltimore.

Stanton, Daniel, Quaker preacher, b. Phila. 1708; d. there June 28, 1770. He began to preach in 1728; travelled in N.E. and the W. Indies; went to Europe in 1748; and visited the Southern Colonies in 1760. He bore testimony against slavery, and against the vices of the city, especially horse-racing, drunkenness, and stage-plays; and was a very zealous, faithful preacher. — See Journal of his Life, Travels, and Gospel Labors, Phila. 8vo, 1772.

Stanton, Edwin McMasters, LL.D. (Y.C. 1867), lawyer and statesman, b. Steubenville, O., Dec. 19, 1814; d. Washington, D.C., Dec. 24, 1869. Kenyon Coll. 1833. His parents were of Quaker origin, and came from Culpeper Co., Va. He became a bookseller's clerk at Columbus, O.; studied law; and in 1836 was adm. to the Columbus bar. He began practice at Cadiz, O.; became prosec. atty. of the Co. in 1837; but soon removed to Steubenville, where he had extensive practice. In 1839–42 he was reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court. In 1848 he removed to Pittsburg, became the leader of the bar, and was often employed in the Supreme Court at Washington. His argument in the case of the Wheeling Suspension Bridge is among the most noted of his efforts during this period. In 1857 he removed to Washington; and in 1858 was employed by Atty.-Gen. Black to go to California to plead the cause of the U.S. in some very important cases. Dec. 14, 1860, he succeeded Mr. Black as atty.-gen., and did his country great service by resisting, as far as possible, the efforts of the secession leaders, then actively engaged in preparing the civil war that soon after broke out. He went out of office with Mr. Buchanan's administration, March 4, 1861; succeeded Gen. Cameron as sec. of war, Jan. 13, 1862; suspended Aug. 12, 1867, by Pres. Johnson; re-instated by the senate, Jan. 14, 1868; resigned May, 1868; app. judge U.S. Supreme Court, Dec. 20, 1869. His labors as war secretary during the Great Rebellion were overwhelming: he slept for months at the office, working till two or three o'clock in the morning, and rising before the sun. His assistant secretaries, men of energy and ability, broke down one after another; but he bore the brunt of the burden with inflexible courage and perseverance, and unequalled ability. His opposition to the policy of the pres. made him obnoxious to Mr. Johnson, who sought to deprive him of his office; but it was retained by Mr. Stanton until the failure of the impeachment trial, upon which he resigned. His health had been shattered by his arduous labors; and he died before his commission to the Supreme-Court bench had been made out. He pub. Reports, Sup. Ct. of Ohio, 1841–4, 3 vols. 8vo; also Reports as Secretary of War, 1862–8.

Stanton, Elizabeth Cady, reformer, b. Johnstown, N.Y., Nov. 12, 1816. Dau. of Judge Daniel Cady. She was educated at the Johnstown Acad., and Mrs. Willard's Seminary at Troy. In 1840 she m. Henry B. Stanton, an antislavery orator, and accomp. him to London, where he was a delegate to the World's Antislavery Convention. Here she made the acquaintance of Lucretia Mott, with whom, upon the question of woman's rights, she found herself in sympathy. On their return, Mr. Stanton practised law in Boston until 1845, when they removed to Seneca Falls, N.Y. The first woman's-rights convention was called by her at Seneca Falls, July 19–20, 1848; and it made the first public demand for woman's suffrage. Since that period she has labored incessantly with pen and voice, travelling over the country, endeavoring to effect this great object. In 1868, she, with Parker Pillsbury and Susan B. Anthony, began to pub. the Revolution in advocacy of the new ideas. (See Eminent Women of the Age.) Her husband, Henry Brewster, b. Griswold, Ct., 1810, studied at Lane Sem., O. Author of "Reforms and Reformers," 1849; addresses, &c.

Stark, CALEB, d. Dunbarton, N.H., Feb. 1, 1864, a. 59. H.U. 1823. Son of Caleb, maj. Revol. army, who served from Bunker's Hill to Yorktown, and who in 1828 removed to O. (b. 3 Dec. 1759; d. 26 Aug. 1838.) He practised law in Cincinnati, O., and Concord, N.H. Author of "Reminiscences of the French War," &c., 8vo, 1831; "A History of Dunbarton, N.H.," 1860; and a Life of his Grandfather, Gen. John Stark, 8vo, 1860.

Stark, JOHN, maj.-gen., b. Londonderry, N.H., Aug. 28, 1728; d. Manchester, N.H., May 8, 1822. Removing with his father to Derryfield, now Manchester, about 1736, he was employed in hunting and husbandry until April 28, 1752, when, being on a hunting exped., he was taken prisoner by the St. Francis Indians. After six weeks' captivity, he was ransomed for 103 dollars. He became very popular with the Indians by his frequent exhibitions of courage and independence, and was adopted into the tribe. App. in 1755 a lieut. in Rogers's company of Rangers, he served in that and the following campaign, and in Jan. 1757, while returning from an exped., the corps was attacked by the French and Indians near Ticonderoga. A sanguinary battle ensued, in which his superior officers were killed or wounded; and upon him devolved the conduct of the retreat, which he effected with great skill and prudence. He was soon afterwards app. a capt. of rangers, and in 1758 participated in the attack on Ticonderoga under Gen. Abercrombie. In the following spring he joined the army of Amherst, and was present at the reduction of Ticonderoga and Crown Point. A member of the com. of safety at the commencement of the Revol., on the news of Lexington battle he repaired at once to Cambridge, and was immediately chosen col. of the N.H. troops. At Bunker's Hill his men were stationed at the left of the line, behind a rail fence, and repeatedly repulsed the enemy with great loss, but, when the redoubt was carried, were compelled to retire. At the close of the northern campaign, in Dec. 1776, he joined Gen. Washington at Newton, com. the vanguard at Trenton, and was very active at the battle of Princeton; having been overlooked in the promotions, he resigned his commission in Apr. 1777, and returned to his farm. On the advance of Burgoyne, the council of N.H. commissioned Stark to raise a force, and guard the frontier. Aug. 16, 1777, he attacked Col. Baum in his intrenchment on the Wallomschaick, near Bennington, and defeated him. Scarcely was this action over, when a detachment under Col. Breyman, sent to succor Baum, arrived, which he also defeated with great loss. Congress passed a vote of thanks to him for this brilliant service, and made him a brig.-gen. Oct. 4, 1777, notwithstanding it had just before passed a vote of censure for his disobedience of the order of Gen. Lincoln to march to the west of the Hudson, — which step, if taken, would have left Burgoyne's rear unmolested. In Sept. he joined Gates, and contributed to the successful issue of the campaign; early in 1778 he com. the northern dept. at Albany; in Oct. joined Gen. Gates in R.I.; in May, 1780, he joined the army in Morristown, and was

Stedingk, CURT BOGISLAUS LOUIS CHRISTOPHER, Count von, field-marshal of Sweden, b. at his father's castle of Pinnau, in Pomerania, Oct. 26, 1746; d. Stockholm, 1837. U. of Upsal, 1768. An ensign, at the age of 13 he accomp. his father in the war between Sweden and Prussia, and was present at the siege of Stralsund. Entering the French service in the Royal Regt. of Swedes, he rose to the rank of lieut.-col. At Versailles, where he remained on duty, he lived in intimate friendship with Count Fersen, another Swedish volunteer in the cause of America. Stedingk, commanding a brigade of inf., sailed in D'Estaing's fleet in 1778. In his operations against the W. I. islands, Stedingk won high honor, especially in the attack upon Grenada; in the assault upon Savannah, Oct. 9, 1779, the rashness and impracticability of which he confidently predicted to D'Estaing, he led one of the two principal assaults, and, after planting the American flag on the last intrenchment, was compelled to retreat with the loss of nearly half his brigade of 900 men, and was himself wounded. After his return to France, the king made him col. of the Regt. of Alsace, and knight of the Protestant branch of the Order of St. Louis; while the king of Sweden, in token of his gallant behavior in America, made him a col. of dragoons and a knight of the Order of the Sword. He also received from Washington the badge of Cincinnatus. Stedingk

He pub. in 1851 "Campaigns of the Rio Grande and Mexico, with Remarks on the Recent Work of Major Ripley."

Stevens, JOHN, inventor, b. New York, 1749; d. Hoboken, N.J., 1838. In 1787 he became interested in steamboats from seeing that of John Fitch, and experimented for near 30 years. In 1789 he petitioned the N.Y. legisl. for a grant of the exclusive navigation of the waters of that State, without success. In 1804 he built a propeller, a small open boat worked by steam, with such success, that he built the steamboat "Phœnix," completed soon after "The Clermont" was finished by Fulton. The latter having the exclusive right for Hudson River, Mr. S. placed his boats on the Delaware and Connecticut. In 1812 he pub. a remarkable pamphlet, urging the govt. to make experiments in railways traversed by steam-carriages; and if feasible, proposed the construction of such a railway from Albany to Lake Erie.

Stevens, CAPT. PHINEAS, b. Sudbury, Ms.; d. Charlestown, N.H., 1756. His father moved to Rutland, N.H., whence, at the age of 16, he was carried prisoner to Canada. In 1746 he volunteered in an exped. against Canada; was afterwards ordered to the frontiers; and at "Number 4" made a gallant defence against the French and Indians in March, 1747. For his bravery on this occasion he was presented with a valuable sword by Commodore Knowles, and continued in com. of the fort until 1750. Sent to Canada by Gov. Shirley in 1749, he left a journal of his visit printed in N.H. Hist. Colls., v. 199. — O'Callaghan.

Stevens, ROBERT LIVINGSTON, inventor, b. Hoboken, N.J., 1788; d. there 20 Apr. 1856. Son of John the inventor. The son at the age of 20 built a steamboat with concave water-lines, the first application of the wave-line to ship-building; adopted a new method of bracing and fastening steamboats; in 1818 discovered the utility [redacted] steam expansively, and using anthracite coal for fuel in steamers; in 1822 substituted the skeleton wrought-iron for the heavy cast-iron walking-beam; in 1824 applied artificial blast to the boiler-furnace, and in 1827 the hog-frame to boats to prevent them from bending at the centre. He also invented the T-rail. About 1816 he commenced steam ferriage between N.Y. City and the Jersey shore. A projector of the Camden and Amboy Railroad, and many years pres. of the company. About 1815 invented an improved bomb for the naval service; commissioned by govt. in 1842 to build an immense steam-battery for the defence of N.Y. harbor, left unfinished at the time of his death.

Stevens, THADDEUS, political leader, b. Peacham, Vt., Apr. 4, 1793; d. Washington, D.C., Aug. 11, 1868. Dartm. Coll. 1814. His parents were poor. He was sickly and lame; but his mother toiled with all her strength to secure for him an education. He was ambitious, and turned his scanty opportunities to such good account, that he succeeded in qualifying himself for college. Immediately after leaving Dartmouth, he moved to York, Pa., where he taught school. Studied law; was adm. to the bar in 1816; and was for many years an eminent practitioner in Gettysburg. In 1828 he entered the political arena, taking sides with the Adams party, and becoming an active Whig. He was several years in the legisl. between 1833 and '41; in 1837 he was a member of the State Const. Conv., taking an active part in all important debates, but, being hostile to slavery, refused to sign the constitution because it restricted suffrage on account of color. After the adoption of the constitution, he was a leading spirit in one of the two legislatures in session at the same time; but they finally coalesced without violence. Canal commiss. in 1838. In 1842 he removed to Lancaster, took a front rank at the bar, and was devoted to his profession until 1848, when he was elected to Congress, and ardently opposed the repeal of the Mo. Compromise, the fugitive-slave law, and the Kansas-Nebraska bill. He was again in Congress from 1859 to his death, and was a recognized leader. During 3 sessions he was chairman of the important com. of ways and means, and was chairman of the com. on reconstruction of the 39th and 40th Congresses. He was also chairman of the board of managers in the impeachment of President Johnson; member of the Baltimore convention in 1864. Thoroughly radical in his views, hating slavery with all the intensity of his nature, believing it just, right, and expedient not only to emancipate, but to arm, the negro, and make him a soldier, and, after the war, to make him a citizen and give him the ballot, he led off in all measures for effecting these ends. The Emancipation Proclamation was urged upon the Pres. by him on all grounds of right, justice, and expediency; the 14th Amendment to the Constitution was initiated and pressed by him. He advocated and carried, during the war, acts of confiscation, and proposed the most rigid and stern measures against the instigators and promoters of the Rebellion to the last day of his life.

North Haven, Ct., Dec. 15, 1727; d. New Haven, May 12, 1795. Y.C. 1746; tutor 1749–55. His grandfather was brought an infant to N.E. in 1634. His father Isaac was minister of North Haven. Ezra was licensed, and preached his first sermon in June, 1749. Dr. Franklin having sent an electrical apparatus to Yale, Mr. Stiles, with one of his fellow-tutors, entered zealously upon this new field of science, and performed the first electrical experiments ever made in New England. In Apr. 1750 he preached to the Stockbridge Indians. Ill-health and religious doubts caused him to begin the study of law in 1752. He was adm. to the bar in 1753, and practised at N. Haven 2 years. In Feb. 1755 he pronounced a Latin oration in honor of Dr. Franklin on occasion of his visiting New Haven, and was on intimate terms with him till his death; in April, 1755, he was invited to preach at Newport, and soon after became settled there permanently, having conquered his theological doubts; in 1777, while a resident of Portsmouth, whither he removed on the British occupation of Newport, he was a second time invited to the pres. of Yale Coll., which he accepted, and entered upon June 23, 1778, filling this post till his death. After the death of Prof. Daggett in 1780, he discharged the duties of prof. of divinity, besides giving each week one or two dissertations on philos. or astronomical subjects. Dr. Stiles was an indefatigable student, acquired many Oriental languages, corresp. with the Jesuits on the geography of California, with Greek bishops on the physical formation of Palestine and the adjacent countries, and addressed scientific and philological queries to travellers from remote regions. Dr. Stiles was, undoubtedly, one of the purest and best-gifted men of his age. One of his daughters m. Rev. Abiel Holmes, by whom his Life was written and pub. in 1798. His Life by Prof. Kingsley is in the second series of Sparks's Collection. His chief literary productions are his "History of Three of the Judges of King Charles I.," 1794; "Account of the Settlement of Bristol," 1785; a funeral oration on Gov. Law, 1751; and on his re-election to his office of president, 1778, in Latin. He wrote many addresses and sermons. One of the latter is an able plea for the union of various N. England denominations. Stiles's Diary and bound manuscripts, preserved at Yale, fill 45 vols., and include numerous important details of the Revol., of which he was an early and constant promoter. "A Family Tablet," Boston, 12mo, 1796, contains poems by the Stiles family. 13 are by Miss Ruth Stiles ("Louisa"), who m. Rev. Caleb Gannett; 3, signed "Eugenio," are by Dr. Ezra Stiles, jun., who d. N.C. Aug. 22, 1784; 8 are by Mary ("Myra"); and 16 are by her husband, Rev. Abiel Holmes ("Myron").

Stockton, RICHARD, signer of the Decl. of Indep., b. Princeton, N. J., Oct. 1, 1730; d. near there Feb. 28, 1781. N. J. Coll. 1748. He studied law with David Ogden of Newark; was adm. to the bar in 1754, and soon became disting. Visiting Eng. in 1766, he rendered valuable services to N. J. Coll.; and on his return, in 1767, was escorted to his residence by the people, by whom he was much beloved. In 1768 he was made a member of the exec. council of N. J.; in 1774 he was app. a judge of the Sup. Court of N. J.; and was chosen a deleg. to Congress in 1776, in time to participate in the debate on the proposition for independence: though at first doubtful of its policy, he cordially supported it. He was re-elected to Congress, where he was an active and influential member. Soon after his return from a mission to the northern army under Schuyler, he was captured by a party of royalists, Nov. 30, 1776, who threw him into prison at New York, and treated him with great severity. Congress interposing, he was exchanged; but he fell a sacrifice to the ill-usage he had received. The enemy destroyed his library, and devastated his lands. He was unrivalled at the bar, and refused to engage in any cause which he knew to be unjust, and stood forth in defence of the helpless and injured.

Stockton, RICHARD, LL.D., lawyer and statesman, son of the preceding, b. Princeton, N. J., April 17, 1764; d. March 7, 1828. N. J. Coll. 1779. In 1796 he was chosen to the U.S. Senate, and in 1813 to the house of representatives; in 1825 he was a commissioner from N. J. to negotiate the settlement of an important territorial controversy with N. Y., and penned the proposed agreement appended to this report. He was a profound lawyer, and an uncommonly eloquent advocate, and, during more than a quarter of a century, was at the head of the bar of New Jersey.

Stockton, ROBERT FIELD, commodore U.S.N., b. Princeton, N. J., 1796; d there Oct. 7, 1866. A.M. of N. J. Coll. 1820. Son of the preceding. He left N. J. Coll. in his 15th year; entered the navy as midshipm. Sept. 1, 1811; received honorable notice for gallantry in several battles; was made lieut. Dec. 9, 1814; com. May 27, 1830; capt. Dec. 8, 1838; resigned May 28, 1850. In 1815, while 1st lieut. of "The Spitfire," he disting. himself by boarding with a boat's crew an Algerine warvessel. Ordered in 1821 to the coast of Africa, he obtained by treaty from the native chiefs the tract constituting the present republic of Liberia. He also captured many slavers, and a Portugnese privateer, "The Marianna Flora" of 22 guns. On his return, he was successful in breaking up the nests of many W. India pirates. In 1826–38 he took an active part in politics in favor of Gen. Jackson, and also in aiding internal improvements in his State. In 1838 he was flag-officer of "The Ohio" in the Mediterranean. He was one of the first to advocate a steam navy; and "The Princeton," built according to his plans in 1844, furnished the model for numerous other vessels. By the explosion of one of her large guns, Feb. 28, 1844, Com. Stockton was seriously injured. Sent to the Pacific in Oct. 1845, he with 1,500 men, including 600 sailors, in about 6 months conquered the whole of California, and established the authority of the U.S. there. Forming a provis. govt., he returned to the east in June, 1847. The difficulty between him and Gen. Kearney in relation to the supreme com. there was subsequently made the subject of a court-martial. U.S. senator in 1851–3, he strenuously opposed intervention in favor of Hungary, and procured the passage of a law for the abolition of flogging in the navy. His life and speeches were pub. 8vo, New York.

Stuart, GILBERT CHARLES, portrait-painter, b. Narraganset, R.I., 1754; d. Boston, July 9, 1828. He was first taught by a Scottish painter named Alexander, by whom, at about 18 years of age, he was taken to Edinburgh. He soon returned, and painted at Newport, Boston, and New York; but, the war making his prospects hopeless, he went to London, where he was aided by Benjamin West with money and instruction. Stuart painted a full-length portrait of his benefactor, now in the British National Gallery. Ab. 1781 he began practice in Lond., and soon rose to great eminence. Subsequently he resided successively in Dublin and Paris, and painted a portrait of Louis XVI. Returning to Amer. in 1793, he painted at Phila. the well-known head of Washington, the original of which is now in possession of the Boston Athenæum. After residing in Washington, he took up his permanent abode in 1806 in Boston. His last work was a portrait of John Quincy Adams. He painted many of the disting. men of the Revol. and of the early period of the Union. He ranks among the first Amer. portrait-painters, and was a man of fine social qualities. His daughters, Mrs. Stebbins and Miss Jane Stuart, long pursued their father's profession in Boston.

Tecumseh, chief of the Shawnees, b. near Springfield, O., ab. 1770; killed in the battle of the Thames, C.W., Oct. 5, 1813. He first appears in a fight with Ky. troops on the Mad River when he was ab. 20, and was said to have run at the first fire; yet, in the war ending at the treaty of Greenville in 1795, he was noted as one of the boldest and most active of the Indian warriors. Ab. 1804 he projected with his bro. Elskwatawa, the "Prophet," the union of all the Western Indians for the extirpation of the whites. He visited all the tribes on the W. bank of the Mpi., on Lakes Superior, Huron, and Michigan; the Prophet assuming to be commiss. to the Indians from the Great Spirit, and preaching against the influence of the white men. They had in 1811 gathered at Tippecanoe, on the Wabash, a force of several hundred warriors, which Gov. Harrison, in the battle of Tippecanoe, Nov. 7, 1811, completely defeated. Tecumseh's plan was not yet matured, and this battle ruined it. He next sought the alliance of the English, and, with the rank of brig.-gen., com. all the Indians who co-operated with the English in the campaigns of 1812–13; was present in every important engagement previous to that of the Thames; and was conspicuous in the skirmishes preceding Hull's surrender at Detroit. In the battle on the Thames, near the Moravian towns, he com. the right wing, the only part of the forces engaged. The Indians were driven back; but Tecumseh rushed forward where the fire was hottest, and fell. The statement that he was killed by Col. R. M. Johnson is not now credited. A Life of Tecumseh, and his bro. the Prophet, was written by Benjamin Drake of Cincinnati in 1841.

Tennent, GILBERT, an eminent preacher, b. Armagh, Ireland, Feb. 5, 1703; d. 23 July, 1764. Son of William, a Presb. minister, who came to this country in 1718, and settled near Phila., where he opened an acad. for the education of students in divinity, and d. ab. 1743. The son assisted in the direction of this establishment, and, after having studied medicine as well as theology, was in 1726 ord. pastor of a cong. at New Brunswick. In 1740 and '41 he travelled through N. Eng. at the request of Whitefield, and preached in many places with great success. He was one of the most conspicuous ministers of his day, ardent in his zeal, forcible in his reasoning, and bold and passionate in his addresses to the conscience and the heart. He affected eccentricity in his preaching, entering the pulpit on his New-England tour in an overcoat bound with a leathern girdle, and with long hair. Notwithstanding his zeal and success as a missionary, a party was formed against him, and he was accused of immorality. To a hostile pamphlet, called "The Examiner," he replied with the "Examiner Examined." This controversy occasioned the convocation of a synod in 1741; but no decision on the points in dispute took place Tennent, with a view to conciliation, pub. a remarkable work under the title of "The Peace of Jerusalem." In 1743 he founded a Presb. church at Phila., and subsequently travelled through some of the States as a missionary. In 1753 he went to Eng. to solicit benefactions to the college of Princeton. Among his other pubs. are an account of a revival of religion in 1744, and on the success of the exped. against Louisburg; discourses on several subjects, 12mo, 1745; "On the Lawfulness of Defensive War," 1747; "On the Consistency of Defensive War with True Christianity;" "Defensive War Defended;" and "Sermons on Important Subjects," 8vo, 1758; xxiii. Sermons, Phila., 8vo, 1744.

Tennent, WILLIAM, clergyman, bro. of the preceding, b. Antrim Co., Ireland, Jan. 3, 1705; d. Freehold, N. J., Mar. 8, 1777. N. J. Coll. 1758. He came to America with his father's family in 1718, and studied theology under his bro. at N. Brunswick. He had nearly completed the course when his health failed, and he fell into a catalepsy, or trance, and for several days appeared as if dead, his body being cold and stiff. His physician, who was also his particular friend, perceiving some slight symptoms of vitality, refused to consent to his burial; and, although his friends were satisfied he was dead, his funeral was postponed 3 days, and subsequently for several hours, efforts for his resuscitation being finally successful. His recovery was slow and painful; all previous knowledge was forgotten; and he had to be taught reading, writing, and all things, as a newborn child. At length he felt a sudden shock in his head, and by degrees his recollection was restored. He told his friends, that, at the time of his apparent death, he found himself in heaven in the presence of an indescribable glory, and of an innumerable host of happy worshippers, and heard songs of praise which were unutterable. When about to join the throng, a heavenly messenger said to him, "You must return to the earth." At the shock of this news he opened his eyes, and, finding himself in the world, fainted. For 3 years, he said, the recollection of what he had seen and heard was so intense as to make earthly things seem worthless. Oct. 25, 1733, he was ord. at Freehold, Monmouth Co., N. J., as successor of his bro. John, and continued pastor 44 years. He pub. a few occasional sermons. A Memoir, giving a very full account of his trance, was prepared and pub. by Judge Elias Boudinot, N.Y., 18mo, 1847.

Thom, JAMES, a self-taught Ayrshire sculptor; d. N.Y. City, Apr. 17, 1850, a. 51. The celebrated group of Tam O'Shanter first raised Thom into notice, and, from the condition of an obscure, uneducated stone-cutter, secured for him fame and employment in London. Mr. Thom came to America ab. 1837 in pursuit of a person who had been previously sent over by the proprietors to exhibit his Tam O'Shanter and Old Mortality, but who, we believe, made no returns, or report of his proceedings. He succeeded in recovering a portion of the money for which it appeared these admirable works had been sold, and transmitted it to the proprietors, who had been his benefactors, determining to remain in Newark to pursue his profession. In exploring the country in that vicinity for stone adapted to his purposes, he brought into notice a fine freestone quarry at Little Falls, which has since furnished the stone for the court house in Newark, Trinity Church, New York, and many other public buildings.

Mar. 3, 1865, he received the thanks of Congress for this eminent service, and from the legisl. of Tenn., 2 Nov. 1865, a vote of thanks and a gold medal. Gen. Thomas was remarkable for simplicity of character, modesty, stability, and discretion. In Feb. 1868, Pres. Johnson having offered him the brev. of lieut.-gen., he declined the compliment, saying he had done nothing since the war to merit such promotion.

Thomas, Isaiah, LL.D. (Alleg. Coll.), journalist and author, b. Boston, Jan. 19, 1749; d. Worcester, Ms., April 4, 1831. Moses his father died while he was yet a child. After an apprenticeship of 11 years to a printer, he at the age of 18 commenced business at Newburyport. In 1770 he transferred his establishment to Boston, and on 17 July, 1771, issued the first number of the Ms. Spy, in which appeared many bold and spirited appeals on the subject of the oppressive acts of parliament towards the Colonies. In 1771 Gov. Hutchinson sought to arraign Mr. Thomas to answer for an article which appeared in his paper; and the atty.-gen. endeavored to procure an indictment against him, but in vain. A few days after the battle of Lexington, in which he participated, he moved his printing-office to Worcester, where he continued to pub. his paper, with which he was connected till 1801; in 1801–19 it was pub. by Isaiah Thomas, jun. In 1788 he opened a bookstore in Boston under the firm of Thomas and Andrews, and also established branches of his publishing business in several parts of the U.S. They pub. the Ms. Magazine 1789–96 in 8 vols. In 1775 he commenced "The New-Eng. Almanac," continued with several titles 42 years. During many years, most of the Bibles and schoolbooks throughout the continent emanated from his establishment at Worcester. In 1812 Mr. Thomas founded the Antiquarian Society of Worcester, of which he was pres. and a most liberal patron. He furnished its library with 7,000 or 8,000 books, besides tracts, and one of the most valuable series of newspapers in the country; erected a building for them on his own ground, and bequeathed the land and hall, with a provision equal to $24,000 for its maintenance. Author of a valuable "History of Printing," 1810, 2 vols. 8vo.

Thomas, James, gov. of Md. 1833–6; d. St. Mary's Co., Md., Dec. 25, 1845, a. 61. He was a man of great worth, and held many public trusts.

Thomas, Gen. John, b. Marshfield, Ms., 1725; d. Chamblee, June 2, 1776. He practised medicine in his native town and in Kingston, Ms., and became an eminent practitioner. In 1746 he was surgeon to a regt. sent to Annapolis Royal, and in 1747 was on the medical staff of Shirley's regt., — a post which he exchanged soon after for that of a lieut. He became in 1759 a col. of provincials; was employed for a time in Nova Scotia; in 1760 com. a regt. under Amherst at Crown Point; and with Col. Haviland, in August, 1760, cooperated in the capture of Montreal. He early enrolled himself among the "Sons of Liberty;" was a delegate to the Prov. Congress; app. provincial brig.-gen. Feb. 9, and cont. brig.-gen. June 22, 1775; maj.-gen. March 6, 1776. During the siege of Boston, he com. a brigade on the Roxbury side nearest the British lines. On the evening of Mar. 4, 1776, with 3,000 men and intrenching tools, he took possession of Dorchester Heights, and, before dawn, formidable works had been thrown up. This strategic movement caused the British to evacuate the town Mar. 17. He was shortly after intrusted with the command in Canada; joined the army before Quebec, May 1, but finding his effective force less than 1,000 men, 300 of whom refused to do duty (the small-pox raging among the troops, and the enemy receiving re-enforcements), determined to raise the siege, and retreat. Before reaching Chamblee on the River Sorel, he was attacked by small-pox, and died of that disease.

In 1831 he was, with Gustave de Beaumont, sent on a mission to the U.S. to examine the penitentiary system; and a full report of their observations was pub. in 1832, entitled "Du Système Penitentiaire aux États-Unis," translated into English by Francis Lieber, 1833. De Tocqueville made himself thoroughly acquainted with the political and social institutions of the country, and pub. in 2 vols. 8vo, Paris, 1835, "De la Democratie aux États-Unis;" and was rewarded in 1836 with a prize by the French Institute, and in 1837 by his nomination to the Acad. of Moral and Political Science, and in 1841 to the French Acad. It was translated by Henry Reeve, with a preface and notes by J. C. Spencer, 8vo, 1838, and abridged by the latter, under the title of "American Institutions and their Influence," N.Y. 1856. Elected in 1839 to the chamber of deputies, he sat with the most moderate members of the opposition; was in 1840 the reporter of a com. upon slavery, and advocated the establishment in France of the American penitentiary system. He foretold the revol. of 1848, and in the constituent assembly strongly opposed socialism and ultra-democratic measures. He was app. by Gen. Cavaignac to represent France in the diplomatic conferences at Brussels upon Italian affairs. June 3, 1849, he became minister of foreign affairs, and strongly supported the French exped. to Rome; but, dissatisfied with the policy of Louis Bonaparte, resigned his office before the end of the year, and sat with the opposition. Dec. 2, 1851, he was one of the deputies who protested against the coup d'état, and was incarcerated, but was released in a few days. Withdrawing from public life, he in 1856 pub. "L'Ancien Régime et la Révolution." In 1859 his "Œuvres et Correspondance Inédites" was pub. with a biog. notice by his friend G. de Beaumont. — Appleton.

He edited Dr. Jas. March's unpub. papers, accompanying them with an interesting Memoir; and also edited ably, and with great care, Neander's "Church History." He edited Dr. Worthington Smith's sermons, and prefixed a Memoir.

Torrey, CAPT. WILLIAM, of Weymouth, one of the first military officers and authors of the Ms. Colony; was a justice of the peace, a freeman in 1642, several years a representative, usually clerk of the deputies, and capt. of the train-band, — as high a rank as then existed. He was a good penman, "skilled in Latin," and wrote a book on the millennium, entitled "A Discourse concerning Futurities to Come, written by a Very Old Man in Continual Expectation of his Translation into Another Life and World," a 4to of about 60 pages, 2d ed., with a preface by Prince, 8vo, 1757. — Eliot.

Totten, GEORGE MUIRSON, engineer, b. N. Haven, Ct., May 28, 1809. Partridge's Milit. Acad. 1826. He became a civil engr. at 18, and until 1844 was employed on railroads and canals in Ms., Ct., Pa., N.J., Va., and N.C. He was next engaged for 5 years on the survey and construction of the Canal del Dique in N. Granada; and in 1849 was app. engr.-in-chief of the Panama Railroad, which in 1855 he successfully completed. He has since been engaged in engineering in the U.S.

Totten, JOSEPH GILBERT, brev. maj.-gen U.S.A., b. New Haven, Ct., Aug. 23, 1788; d. Washington, D.C., Apr. 22, 1864. West Point (lieut. of engineers), 1805. Capt. 31 July, 1812; chief engr. of the army in the campaigns of 1812–13 on the Niagara; disting. in capture of Fort George, 27 May, 1813; brev. maj. for meritorious service, June 6, 1813; chief engr. of Gens. Izard and Macomb's div. in 1814 at Lake Champlain; brev. lieut.-col. for gallant conduct at the battle of Plattsburg, Sept. 11, 1814; maj. Nov. 12, 1818; lieut.-col. May 24, 1828; col. and chief engr. Dec. 7, 1838; chief engr. of the army of Gen. Scott in the siege of Vera Cruz; commiss. at capitulation of Vera Cruz, Mex., March 25, 1847; brev. brig.-gen. for gallantry at the siege of Vera Cruz, 29 Mar. 1847. A regent of the Smithsonian Institution 1846–64. Brig.-gen. and chief of engrs. U.S.A. 3 Mar. 1863; brev. maj.-gen. 21 April, 1864. The fortifications of Newport, R.I., and other defensive works built by him, are enduring monuments to his memory. Toucey, ISAAC, LL.D., politician and lawyer, b. Newtown, Ct., Nov. 5, 1796; d. Hartford, July 30, 1869. Descended from Rev. Thos., first Cong. minister of Newtown (Y.C. 1707). He received a common-school education; adopted the profession of law; was adm. to the Hartford bar in 1818, and was State-atty. for his native county in 1822–35; M.C. 1835–9; State-atty. 1842–4; gov. of Ct. in 1846–7; in 1848–9 U.S. atty.-gen.; State senator in 1851; member of the Assembly in 1852; U.S. senator 1852–7; and from 1857 to 1861 sec. of the navy. He wielded a powerful influence by his coolness, deliberation, and judicial cast of mind. "In justice to his memory it must be said, that the charges made against him, that, while sec. of the navy under Mr. Buchanan, he deliberately sent away our vessels to distant seas to prevent their use in suppressing secession at its commencement, and that he favored and aided secession, have very slight foundation in truth. He avowed that he opposed secession in the cabinet as wholly inadmissible under the Constitution; though his personal feelings were known to be with the South, and in opposition to the war."

Toulmin, HARRY, jurist and author, b. Taunton, Eng., 1767; d. Washington Co., Ala., Nov. 11, 1823. Son of the eminent Dr. Joshua Toulmin. Was a dissenting minister for several years at Chorobert, Lancashire; came to Norfolk, Va., in 1793; pres. of Transylv. U. 1794–6; sec. of state of Ky. 1796–1804; app. judge of U.S. Dist. N. Orleans, Jan. 18, 1854. His father, Rev. Isaac, came from Holland, and in 1762 became priest of the synagogue at Newport. In 1798 Judah sailed as supercargo to the Mediterranean for his uncle. During the voyage, the ship in which he sailed came off victorious in a desperate conflict with a French privateer. After residing some time in Boston, he in 1802 removed to New Orleans, where he became a merchant, and acquired a fortune, which he bequeathed principally to the public institutions of that city. In 1815 he served as a soldier at the battle of New Orleans, and was wounded in the hip by a cannon-ball, from the effects of which he never entirely recovered. Though of the Jewish faith, he contributed liberal sums to many Christian enterprises, among which may be mentioned the donation of a valuable building-lot to the cong. of Rev. Mr. Clapp for the First Cong. Church of N. O. He gave $10,000 towards the Bunker-hill Monument.

Toussaint L'Ouverture (too-san loo-vĕr'-tür'), François Dominique, a Haytien gen., b. near Cape St. François, 1743; d. in the dungeon of St. Joux, France, Apr. 27, 1803, of starvation. His parents were negro slaves. By intelligence and faithfulness he was raised to important posts on his master's estate, and was able to acquire some mental cultivation. In 1791, when the mulattoes appealed to the negroes for help against the tyranny of the colonial govt., Toussaint incurred the hostility of his race by remaining quiet and faithful. He joined the negro army subsequently in a medical capacity; was soon made brig.-gen.; disting. himself by the capture of the entire army of Brandicourt, the gen. of the whites, also taking Doudon, an important post; July 27, 1795, he took Marmelade, another important post, defeated the French col. Desfourneaux, and seized Emery and Gonaives. Toussaint soon after declared for France, being already com. in chief of the black forces, formed a junction with Laveaux, received the capitulation of the entire English force at St. Marc, and drove the Spanish from the W. portion of the island. In 1796 he was app. com.-in-chief of St. Domingo by Santhonax, the French commiss., and succeeded in restoring order and industry to the island; in 1799 he completely quelled the mulatto insurrection of Rigaud; Nov. 26, 1800, he assumed the govt. under the French Directory alone; and in Jan. 1801 the whole island became subject to his sway. He labored successfully to restore industry, to remove prejudice, and to establish good order. A constitution was drawn up; he was named pres. for life; and free trade was established. These measures gave so much offence to Bonaparte, who had not been consulted previously, that he at once resolved to use a disaffected portion of his then unemployed army to subjugate and re-enslave the blacks. Gen. Leclerc was sent in Nov. 1801 with 30,000 men; drove them, after a sanguinary conflict, from the seaports into the mountain fastnesses, and finally, by promises and cajolery, won over Christophe, Dessalines, and the other generals. The destruction of Toussaint having been determined upon, he was invited to an interview at Gonaives with Gen. Brunet; was seized by an armed force, and taken to France; reached Paris Aug. 17, 1802; was confined in the Temple, and without a trial was transferred to the dungeons of the Castle of Joux, in the dpt. of Doubs. Deprived of all society, subjected to intense cold, with insufficient clothing and food, the heroic old man appealed repeatedly, but in vain, for a trial. Finding that his appeals for a trial produced no response, he commenced his defence, which was transmitted to Bonaparte. His Memoirs have been pub. by Saint-Rémy, Paris, 1850; by J. R. Beard, London, 1853; and by J. Redpath, 1863; and he was made the subject of a lecture by Wendell Phillips, 1863.

Toussard, Col. Louis, b. France, 1749; d. N. Orleans ab. 1820. Originally an artillery-officer in the regt. of La Fere. In Mar. 1777 he arrived in America with other officers recommended by Silas Deane; in June received a lieutenant's commiss.; was afterward aide to Lafayette; lost an arm at Rhode Island in the fall of 1778; and soon after received from Congress the brev. of lieut.-col. and a pension for life. He afterward served the French govt. in the W. Indies. He returned to the U.S. in 1794; was app. major in Feb. 1795; lieut.-col. 2d Art. in 1800; disb. Jan. 1802. Afterward French consul at N. Orleans (1812–15). Author of "Artillerist's Companion," 2 vols. 8vo, Phila., 1809.

Tower, Zealous Bates, brev. maj.-gen. U.S.A., b. Boston ab. 1819. West Point, 1841 (first in his class). Received his early education at the Boston High School. App. 2d lieut. of engrs.; assist. prof. of eng. Aug. 31, 1842, to Apr. 4, 1843; brev. 1st lieut. for gallantry at Cerro Gerdo, April 18; capt. for gallantry at Contreras and Churubusco, Aug. 20; and major for gallantry at Chapultepec, Sept. 8, 1847; made 1st lieut. Apr. 24, 1847; capt. 1 July, 1855; major, Aug. 6, 1861; lieut.-col. Nov. 4, 1865; brig.-gen. vols. Nov. 23, 1861; chief engr. of defences of Fort Pickens, Fla., Feb. 1861 to May, 1862; and in the Northern Va. campaign, July–Aug. 1862; was in the battles of Cedar Mountain, Rappahannock Station, and Thoroughfare Gap. He com. a brigade in the second battle of Bull Run, and was wounded; was chief engr. of the defences of Nashville, Tenn., 28 Sept. 1864 to July, 1865; engaged in repulse of Hood, and battle of Nashville, 15 and 16 Dec. 1864. Member of the board of engrs. since 18 May, 1867; brev. lieut.-col. 23 Nov. 1861 for the defence of Fort Pickens, Fla.; col. for Cedar Mountain 9 Aug. 1862; brig. and maj. gen. Townshend, Charles, an English statesman, b. Aug. 29, 1725; d. Sept. 4, 1767. Second son of Charles, the third viscount. In 1747 he entered parliament, and acquired a bright reputation as an orator; in June, 1749, he was app. a commiss. of trade and plantations; in 1756 a member of the privy council; in Mar. 1761 sec. at war; in Feb. 1763 first lord of trade and plantations; in June, 1765, paymaster-gen. and chancellor of the exchequer; and a lord of the treasury in Aug. 1766. "He had voted, and in the year 1765 had been an advocate, for the Stamp Act. He therefore attended at the private meeting in which resolutions leading to its repeal were settled; and he would have spoken for that measure too, if illness had not prevented him. The very next session, as the fashion of this world passeth away, the repeal began to be in as bad odor as the Stamp Act had been before. To conform to the temper which began to prevail, and to prevail mostly among those most in power, he declared that revenue must be had out of America." June 2, 1767, he introduced into the house of commons the celebrated resolutions imposing duties upon paper, tea, and other articles imported into the American Colonies, which eventually led to their revolt and independence. Says Macaulay, "He was a man of splendid talents, of lax principles, and of boundless vanity and presumption."

Townshend, George, marquis, an Eng. field-marshal, b. Feb. 28, 1724; d. Sept. 14, 1807. Eldest son of the third viscount, whom he succeeded in May, 1767. He served at the battles of Dettingen, Fontenoy, Culloden, and Laffeldt; and, in the exped. to Canada under Wolfe, com. a division. After the first battle of the Plains of Abraham, and the death of Wolfe, he took com. of the army, and five days after received the capitulation of De Ramsay. He then returned to Eng.; was M.P. in 1754–64; rose to the highest rank in the army; became a privy councillor; was lord lieut. of Ireland in 1767–72; and was created marquis Oct. 6, 1787.

Towson, Gen. Nathan, b. near Baltimore, Jan. 22, 1784; d. Washington, D.C., July 20, 1854. Previous to the war of 1812 he com. a company of vol. art., and was adj. of the 7th Md. Regt. In Mar. 1812 he was app. a capt. in the 2d U.S. Art., and Oct. 9, aided by Lieut. Elliot of the navy, captured the British brig "Caledonia," under the guns of Fort Erie. He was engaged in the battle of Queenstown, in the capture of Fort George, the affair at Stony Creek, and on the 17th of July, 1813, he was wounded in repelling an attack of the British on the outworks of Fort George, U.C. During the campaign of 1814, Towson com. a battery in one of the divisions of Gen. Brown's army. Being attached to the brigade of Scott, he participated in the capture of Fort Erie, July 4; was detailed with his battery to bring on the battle of Chippewa. In this conflict Towson bore a conspicuous part, and contributed greatly to the success of the day. In the obstinately-contested battle of Niagara, July 25 (the hardest fought and most sanguinary of the war), Capt. Towson was in the front rank from first to last. Aug. 15 he performed a most important part, and in the defence of Fort Erie elicited from Gen. Ripley the highest encomiums on his skill and valor. In May, 1816, he received brevets of major and lieut.-col. for his achievements; was in 1819 app. paymaster-gen.; in 1834 received the brev. of brig.-gen., and in Mar. 1849 that of maj.-gen., for meritorious services performed during the Mexican war. Trumbull, John, LL.D. (Y.C. 1818), poet, b. Westbury, since Watertown, Ct., Apr. 24, 1750; d. Detroit, Mich., May 10, 1831. Y.C. 1767. Son of John, minister of Watertown, a good classical scholar, who d. Dec. 13, 1787, a. 72. Possessing an extraordinary precocity, he was at the age of 7 adm. to college; though his extreme youth, and his subsequent ill-health, prevented his residing there until 1763. With Timothy Dwight, in 1769 he wrote a series of essays in the manner of the Spectator for a gazette printed in Boston, and subsequently similar essays for the New-Haven papers. From Sept. 1771 to Nov. 1773, when he was adm. to the bar of Ct., he was a tutor in Y.C., during which time he pub. "The Progress of Dulness," — a poem designed to expose the absurd method of education which then prevailed. Entering the office of John Adams in Boston in 1773, he found himself in the centre of American politics. Warmly espousing the popular side, he employed his leisure in writing political essays for the public gazettes; and, just before leaving Boston, he anonymously pub. his "Elegy on the Times." Commencing a successful practice at New Haven in Nov. 1774, he wrote during the next year the first part of "McFingal," which was pub. in Phila. In Nov. 1776 he m. Sarah, dau. of Col. Levgrett Hubbard of N. Haven; in May following he returned to his native place, whence he removed to Hartford in June, 1781. Having completed the poem of "McFingal," it was pub. at Hartford before the close of 1782. It is a burlesque epic in Hudibrastic verse, directed against the enemies of American liberty (his "Poetical Works" appeared at Hartford in 2 vols. 1820), and has passed through many editions, — the latest in 1864, with notes by B. J. Lossing. After the peace, Trumbull, in

Trumbull, JONATHAN, LL.D. (Y.C. 1779, Edinb. 1785), gov. of Ct. 1769–83, b. Lebanon, Ct., 10 June, 1710; d. 17 Aug. 1785. H.U. 1727. Descended from John of Rowley, Ms., 1640–3. After preaching a few years, he studied law, in which profession he attained eminence; became a member of the Assembly at 23; and by his business-talents gained the public esteem. Chosen lieut.-gov. in 1766, he became by virtue of his office chief justice of the Superior Court. Boldly refusing in 1768 to take the oath enjoined on royal officers, he was chosen gov. in 1769, and was the only colonial gov. who espoused the cause of the people. He was considered the Whig leader in N.E. while the Adamses and Hancock were in Congress, and during the whole contest was relied on by Washington as one of his main pillars of support. The phrase sometimes used by him, "Let us see what Brother Jonathan says," is supposed to have originated the humorous term frequently applied to the U.S. — See Life of Trumbull by Isaac Stuart.

Trumbull, JONATHAN, gov. of Ct. 1798–1809, son of the preceding, b. Lebanon, Ct., Mar. 26, 1740; d. Aug. 7, 1809. H.U. 1759. An active and influential member of the State legisl. during several sessions before and at the commencement of the Revol., and speaker of the house. In 1775–8 was paymaster to the northern dept. of the army; in 1780 was app. sec. and first aide to Washington, whose friendship and confidence he enjoyed, and in whose family he remained until the close of the war. M.C. in 1789–95; speaker 1791–5; U.S. senator in 1795–6; lieut.-gov. of Ct. 1796–8.

Trumbull, COL. JOSEPH, commiss.-gen. Revol. army, July 19, 1775–Aug. 2, 1777, b. 11 Mar. 1737; d. 23 July, 1778. H.U. 1756. Son of Gov. Jonathan (1769–83). Member Old Congress in 1774–5, and a commissioner for the board of war 27 Nov. 1777 to 18 Apr. 1778, when he resigned in ill-health. A com. of Congress having made a highly eulogistic report on his services, 31 Mar. 1779, that body voted to his heirs a commission on the sums received and issued and the purchases made by him.

Trumbull, JOSEPH, LL.D. (Y.C. 1849), statesman, b. Lebanon, Ct., Dec. 7, 1782; d. Hartford, Aug. 4, 1861. Y.C. 1801. Grandson of Gov. Jonathan (1769–83). Adm. to the bar in Windham in 1803; he settled in Hartford in 1804; retired from practice in 1828, and became pres. of the Hartford Bank. He represented Hartford in the legisl. in 1832, '48, and '51; was M.C. in 1834 for an unexpired term, and in 1839–43; and gov. in 1849–50. He was a great friend of internal improvements, and was pres. of a railroad company.

Trumbull, LYMAN, jurist and senator, b. Colchester, Ct., 12 Oct. 1813; of the same family as the preceding. Educated at Colchester Acad.; taught a dist. school; and at 20 took charge of an acad. at Greenville, Ga., where he studied law; and was adm. to the bar in 1837, and settled in Belleville, Ill. Member of the Ill. legisl. in 1840; sec. of state in 1841–2; justice of the Supreme Court of Ill. 1848–53;

M.C. in 1854 chosen to the U.S. senate by the Ill. legisl. in 1855; re-elected in 1860 and 1866; since 1861 chairman of the senate judiciary com. He owed his election to the senate, over Gen. Shields, to his opposition to the repeal of the Missouri Compromise. Removed to Chicago in 1863.

Truxtun, THOMAS, commodore U.S.N., b. Long Island, Feb. 17, 1755; d. Phila. May 5, 1822. He commenced a seafaring life at the age of 12; was impressed, and served a short time on board a man-of-war. Early in 1776 he was lieut. of the private armed ship "Congress," and brought one of her prizes to New Bedford; in June, 1777, he com. "The Independence," fitted out by himself and Isaac Sears; and off the Azores captured 3 valuable prizes. He afterwards made numerous prizes in "The Mars;" and in "The St. James" (of 20 guns), in a severe engagement, disabled a British ship of 32 guns, returning with a most valuable cargo from France. After the war he was extensively engaged in the E. India trade at Phila. till made capt. (June 4, 1794), and intrusted with the com. of the frigate "Constellation." While cruising in the W. Indies, he fell in with the French frigate "L'Insurgente," Feb. 9, 1799, and captured her, though of superior force, in consideration of which he received a service of plate from the merchants of Lloyd's coffee-house; Feb. 1, 1800, he obtained a victory over "The Vengeance" (of 54 guns and 500 men); though, in consequence of one of his masts falling, she afterwards escaped. For this action Congress gave him a gold medal. In 1801 he was transferred to "The President" (44), and was commodore on the Guadaloupe station; at one time he had a squadron of 10 sail under his command. Being app. in 1802 to com. the exped. against Tripoli, but denied the assistance of a capt. to com. his flag-ship, he declined the service, for which Jefferson dismissed him. High sheriff of Phila. 1816–19. He pub. Remarks, &c., relating to Latitude and Longitude, and Variation of the Compass, fol., 1794.

Tryon, CAPT. MOSES, of the Revol. navy, afterward com. of the U.S. sloop of war "Connecticut; d. Wethersfield, Ct., Jan. 1818, a. 68.

Tryon, WILLIAM, LL.D. (King's Coll. 1774), a colonial gov., b. Ireland; d. Lond. 27 Feb. 1788. He was an officer of talent in the British army, and through his marriage with Miss Wake, a relative of the Earl of Hillsborough, colonial sec., received the app. of lieut.-gov. of N.C. He arrived there 27 Oct. 1764; on the death of Gov. Dobbs, 20 July, 1765, succeeded him, and administered the govt. until advanced to that of N.Y. 3 July, 1771. In 1771 an outbreak by discontented individuals, called "Regulators," was suppressed by him, and the prisoners were treated with great cruelty. Made col. 25 May, 1772; maj.-gen. 29 Aug. 1777. He led in person the predatory exped. against Danbury, Ct., which he destroyed in Apr. 1777; and in July, 1779, in a similar exped., reduced to ruin the villages of Fairfield and Norwalk, staining his reputation by conduct unworthy a soldier and a man. Resigning the govt. of N.Y. 21 Mar. 1780, he returned to Eng., became a lieut.-gen 20 Nov 1782, and col. 29th Foot 15 Aug. 1783.

Tuck, JOSEPH HENRY, inventor, b. Dorchester, Ms., 12 March, 1812. Grandson of John (minister of Epsom, N.H., and a chaplain Revol. army; d. Peekskill, N.Y., 7 Feb. 1777, a. 36; H.U. 1758). A grad. of the Boston High School; learned the trade of watchmaking, and afterward, while employed in a candle-manuf., began the career in which he attained eminence with the invention of the endless wick. Establishing himself in London as a civil eng. in 1837, from that time until his return to the U.S. in 1865 he was constantly occupied in inventing and introducing improved machinery, &c. Among the 55 patents taken by him in different countries are those for a candle machine, wrought-iron and bitumen gas and water pipes, a ventilating machine, a dredging machine, a rotary engine, a new system of breakwater for harbors, and his steam-engine packing, — the most profitable of his inventions. He established, after great labor in overcoming prejudice, &c., the company to lay the first submarine electric-cable in 1848–9 between Dover and Calais, but was robbed of his interests in it by those whom he had interested in and assisted in planning that great undertaking. His plans and improvements for excavating the Suez Canal were taken by the contractors; but illness compelled him to abandon further connection with the undertaking. These arduous labors impaired his health, and compelled his retirement from active life for several years. Since 1869 he has been occupied in extensive real-estate operations and public improvements in Brooklyn, New York.

father, an English physician, in connection with Lord Hillsborough, obtained grants from the English govt., ab. the year 1772, for settling a Greek colony in Florida, where he founded New Smyrna. Adhering to the popular side, Dr. T. forfeited his grants from govt., and removed to Charleston, S.C. The son was educated in England; studied law in Charleston and Phila.; was adm. to the bar, and practised in Charleston until 1810, when he retired to his large plantation. His treatise on the penitentiary system (Lond. 1797) drew attention both in America and Eng.; his articles for the Charleston Mercury in 1827, subsequently collected and pub. under title of "The Crisis," became the text-book of the nullification party. In his treatise on "The Tribunal of Dernier Resort," pub. 1830, he argued that "each State has the unquestionable right to judge of the infractions of the Constitution, and to interpose its sovereign powers to arrest their progress, and to protect its citizens." In 1831 he was prominent in the "Free-trade Convention" which assembled at Columbia, S.C., and was the author of the report of that body; in a similar convention at Charleston, Feb. 1832, he was also conspicuous. July 4, 1832, he delivered an oration before an assemblage of the nullification party, which is said to have had a great effect upon the next election; in Nov. 1832 he was a delegate to the S.C. nullification convention, and penned its address to the people. A lofty monument in Charleston, erected by the nullification party, commemorates his services to their cause. — Appleton.

He was one of the Revol. leaders of Va.; many years a member of the house of delegates; and in 1781 succeeded Benjamin Harrison as speaker. He was gov. in 1808–11, and was subsequently judge of the U. S. dist. court. Father of Pres. John Tyler.

Tyler, JOHN, 10th pres. of the U. S., b. Charles-City Co., Va., March 29, 1790; d. Richmond, Va., Jan. 17, 1862. Wm. and Mary Coll. 1806. Son of the preceding. Mary his mother was the only child of Robert Armistead, whose ancestors emigrated to Va. from Hesse-Darmstadt. He studied law; at 19 was adm. to the bar, and soon entered upon a large practice. He was a member of the State legisl. in 1811–16, and a supporter of Jefferson and Madison; M.C. in 1816–21; again a member of the State legisl. in 1823–5; gov. of Va. 1825–7; U. S. senator 1827–36, resigning on account of a difference with Pres. Jackson. Chosen vice-pres. by the Whig party in 1840, the death of President Harrison, April 4, 1841, raised him to the chief magistracy. In 1861 he was a delegate to the Peace Conv., and presided over that body. He subsequently renounced his allegiance to the U.S., and at the time of his death was a member of the Confed. Congress at Richmond. In Congress he voted to censure Gen. Jackson's conduct during the Seminole war; opposed all internal improvements by the General Govt., and the U.S. Bank, which he declared unconstitutional. He held in all points to the State-rights or strict-construction doctrine of the Democ. party. He also opposed a protective tariff, and on the Mo. question all restriction on slavery. In the U.S. senate he avowed his sympathy with the nullification movement in S.C. in 1832, and in consequence withdrew his support from Jackson, but voted for Clay's Compromise Bill. By his veto of the U.S. Bank measure he lost the confidence of the party that placed him in power, and foreshadowed his desertion of it. The principal measures of his administration were the annexation of Texas, March 1, 1845, an act establishing a uniform system of bankruptcy, and the protective tariff of 1842. His Life and Speeches were pub. 8vo, N.Y., 1844.

Congress, also of the com. which framed the constitution of N.Y. The Van Cortlandt family, originally noble in Holland, was established in America by Rt. Hon. Oliver Stephen, who in 1629 accomp. the Dutch gov. to N.Y. as secretary.

Vancouver, GEORGE, navigator and explorer of the north-west coast of America; b. ab. 1757; d. May 10, 1798. Entering the navy in 1771, he accomp. Cook in his two last voyages, and in the latter part of 1780 was app. a lieut.; in 1790 he was made master and com. of "The Discovery," in which ship he was sent out to ascertain if there existed in North America, between the 30th and 60th degrees of n. lat., an interior sea or any canals of communication between the known gulfs of the Atlantic and the great sea. He sailed from Eng. Apr. 1, 1791; and, after an examination of the Sandwich Islands, crossed in March, 1792, to the American coast, where he received the surrender of Nootka from the Spaniards, and spent the summers of 1792, '93, and '94 in surveying the coast as far N. as Cook's Inlet, wintering in the Sandwich Islands. He considered his explorations to have settled the question of a north-west passage in the negative. Vancouver's Island was named by him. On his return, he surveyed most of the W. coast of S. America from the Island of Chiloe, visiting the chief Spanish settlements. He was made a post-capt. in 1794, and arrived in Lond. in Nov. 1795 in a state of declining health from the effects of his voyages, but devoted himself to the arrangement of his manuscripts for publication until within a short time of his death. His Voyages, edited by his bro., was printed at the expense of govt. (4to, Lond. 1798), and was shortly after translated into French, German, and Swedish.

Varnum, Gen. Joseph Bradley, soldier and statesman, bro. of the preceding, b. Dracut, Ms., 1750; d. there Sept. 11, 1821. He sustained important offices in the Revol. army; after which he was rep., senator, and councillor of Ms.; M.C. in 1795–1811; speaker of the 10th and 11th Congresses; and U.S. senator 1811–17. He was a member of the conv. which ratified the U.S. Constitution in 1787; a leading member of other State conventions; and at the time of his death was senior member of the senate, and the oldest maj.-gen. in the State. He was an earnest advocate of the Federal Constitution, and a zealous supporter of Jefferson.

Vassar, Matthew, founder of the Vassar Coll., b. Norfolk Co., Eng., Apr. 29, 1792; d. Poughkeepsie, June 23, 1868. His father came to the U.S. in 1796, settled in 1797 on a farm near Poughkeepsie, and carried on a brewery from 1801 to 1812. His son followed this business, and accumulated a large fortune. In Feb. 1861 he delivered to trustees incorporated for the purpose $408,000 for the founding of a female college. After his death, it was found that the bequests he had made for its endowment, repair, and furnishing, increased the aggregate to over $800,000. He did not propose to make it a charity-school, but to offer the highest educational facilities to females at a moderate expense, and to admit as beneficiaries those who were unable to meet even this expense. Its site is about one mile from Poughkeepsie, and contains about 200 acres.

Vaudreuil (vō'-drul'), Philippe de Rigaud, Marquis de, gov. of Canada from 1703 to his d., Quebec, Oct. 10, 1725. Son of the Marquis de V., who was killed at Luzara in 1702. He entered young into the career of arms; was distinguished at the siege of Valenciennes; was named in 1689 gov. of Montreal; served under Frontenac in the great exped. against the Iroquois; in 1690 was engaged in the defence of Quebec against the attack of Admiral Phips; three years afterward he surprised and defeated La Chaudière Noir, the most terrible and cunning of the Iroquois. He gave up the military for the naval service, and in 1702, before inheriting his father's title, obtained a seigniory. De Vaudreuil gave the English Colonies incredible trouble by the long war he maintained against them by exciting the savages to perpetual inroads on their frontiers. After the accession of Louis XV., he effected numerous reforms in the Colony, the most important of which were the improvement of education and civilization. His son Pierre François, Marquis de Vaudreuil-Cavagnal, the last French gov. of Canada, and the best, b. Quebec, 1698, d. France, 1764. Entering the army, he became major in the marine corps. In 1733 he became gov. of Three Rivers, and in 1743 of La. He succeeded to his father's title in 1748, and in 1755 was made gov. of New France. The jealousy, or rather contempt, with which Montcalm regarded him, tended to hasten the downfall of the French empire in America. After the surrender of Montreal, he returned to France, and was imprisoned in the Bastille on charges preferred by the friends of Montcalm; but a trial at le chatelet de Paris exonerated him from blame, and he was released, but stripped of nearly all his possessions. Another son, Pierre François Rigaud, chev. de, b. Montreal, 8 Feb. 1704, was a brave soldier; captured Fort Massachusetts; defeated Col. Parker at Lake St. Sacrament; and performed other important services. He was living at St. Germaine en laye in 1770. — Morgan.

City; naval officer of N.Y. in Washington's administration; M.C. 1801–3. In 1797 he became agent for the Earl of Bute's great estates in Western N.Y.; and was identified with the growth and progress of Utica.

Walker, Gen. Francis Amasa, statistician, second son of Amasa and Hannah Ambrose Walker, b. Boston, 2 July, 1840. Amh. Coll. 1860. In 1843 his father removed to N. Brookfield. Francis began to study law with Devens and Hoar of Worcester; but in 1861 was made serg.-maj. of Devens's (15th Ms.) regt.; 14 Sept. 1861, assist. adj.-gen. Couch's brigade; 11 Aug. 1862, adj.-gen. Couch's div.; and 23 Dec. 1863, became a col. on the staff of the 2d army corps; brev. brig.-gen. 1865. He served in the Army of the Potomac; was wounded at Chancellorsville; made prisoner at Reams's Station; was confined in Libby Prison, suffering so much in health as to be obliged to resign after being exchanged early in 1865. He subsequently taught for 2 years in the Williston Sem.; was then for one year assist. ed. Springfield Republican; then took charge of the bureau of statistics at Washington; was superintendent of the census of 1870; and in Nov. 1871 was app. Indian commissioner.

Walker, Henderson, gov. N.C. from 1699 to his d. April 14, 1704, a. 44. He was a lawyer, judge of the Supreme Court, and pres. of the council, and introduced important reforms in the judiciary.

Walker, Sir Hovenden, kt., of Somersham, Eng., a British adm.; d. broken-hearted in Dublin, Jan. 1726. He entered the navy young; became a capt. in 1692; rear-adm. of the white in 1710; and for his gallantry was in 1711 knighted by Queen Anne. He is connected with our history by his ill-starred exped. which in that year sailed for Quebec to wrest Canada from the French. The difficult navigation of the St. Lawrence, as well as a storm, which wrecked half his ships on Isle aux Œufs, compelled his return to England. Here he suffered more reverses: his ship "The Edgar" (of 74 guns) blew up at Spithead, and nearly all the crew perished. Blamed for negligence in this matter, and his ill fortune at Quebec being yet recent, he was dismissed the service in 1715. He pub. in 1720 "A Journal or Full Account of the Late Exped. to Canada," &c. He had previously settled upon a plantation in South Carolina.

1730. A descendant of Robert of Boston, 1634, and of his son Zechariah, minister of Stratford and Woodbury in 1670–1700.

Walker, ROBERT JAMES, statesman and financier, b. Northumberland, Pa., 19 July, 1801; d. Washington, D. C., 11 Nov. 1869. U. of Pa. 1819. Adm. to the Pittsburg bar in 1821. At 22 he was chairman of a Democ. com., and was instrumental in effecting Jackson's first nomination to the presidency in 1824. In the spring of 1826 he settled in Natchez, Mpi. U.S. senator 1837–45, and a leader of the Democ. party. He supported the leading measures of Van Buren, especially the divorce of the govt. from the banks; exercised great influence over Pres. Tyler, whom he induced to veto the bank bill framed under the auspices of Mr. Clay; and counselled the vigorous steps which led to the incorporation of Texas into the Union. He was instrumental in defeating Mr. Van Buren's 3d nomination, and secured that of Mr. Polk; a letter of Mr. Walker's on the Texas question largely influencing the election of the latter. Sec. U.S. treasury 1845–9; gov. of Kansas Terr. Apr. 1857–8 (a period of great difficulty), he resigned, being "unwilling to aid in forcing slavery on Kansas by fraud and forgery." During the Rebellion he materially aided the Union cause, being financial agent of the U. S. in Europe (May, 1863–Nov. 1864), effecting the sale of $250,000,000 of 5–20 bonds, and defeating the second Confed. loan of $75,000,000. Influential in procuring the ratification of the Alaska Treaty, and an able and efficient advocate of the Pacific Railroad. His celebrated report in favor of free-trade was reprinted by order of the British house of commons. In connection with his law-partner, F. P. Stanton, he pub. a monthly mag. of merit, but with pecuniary loss. Author of "Reports of Sup. Court of Mpi. 1818–32," 8vo, 1834; "Argument on the Mpi. Slave-Question," 1841.

Walker, SEARS COOK, mathematician and astronomer, b. Wilmington, Ms., March 28, 1805; d. Cincinnati, Jan. 30, 1853. H. U. 1825. He taught school near Boston and in Phila., whither he removed in 1827. His parallactic tables, first prepared in 1834, greatly reduced the time needed for computing the phases of an occultation. In 1837 he prepared a plan for the organization of an observatory in connection with the Phila. High School, which was the first in America deserving the name, except the one at Hudson, Ohio. From its equipment in 1840 until 1852, he pub. in the "Proceedings" of the Philos. Soc. and the Am. Jour. of Science many observations and investigations made by himself, or in conjunction with his half-bro. Prof. Kendall. In 1841 he pub. a valuable memoir on the periodical meteors of Aug. and Nov.; in 1845 he was placed in the Washington Observatory, where, Feb. 2, 1847, 4 months after the discovery of the planet Neptune, he discovered that a star observed by Lalande in May, 1795, must have been this planet, — a fact subsequently demonstrated. Leaving the observatory soon after, he took charge of the longitude computations of the U.S. coast-survey, an office in which he remained until his last illness. By 1849, the joint labors of Walker and Bache had successfully carried out the method of telegraphic longitude determinations. The introduction of the chronographic method of recording observations belongs to them. Walker pub. Ephemeris of the planet Neptune for 1848–52; and Researches relative to that planet, 1850.

Walker, TIMOTHY, jurist, b. Rumford, June 26, 1737; d. May 5, 1822. H.U. 1756. Son of Rev. Timothy, minister of Concord 1730–82. He studied divinity; com. a regt. of minute-men at the siege of Boston; was one of the com. of safety 1776; was afterwards paymaster; member of State Constitutional Convention; State representative and senator; judge of C. C. P. in N. H. 1777–1804; chief justice 1804–9.

Walker, TIMOTHY, LL.D. (H.U. 1854), jurist, b. Wilmington, Ms., Dec. 1, 1802; d. Cincinnati, O., Jan. 15, 1856. H. U. 1826. Bro. of Sears Cook. He taught three years in the Round-hill School, Northampton; entered the Dane Law School in 1829; and in 1830 went to Cincinnati, where he was in 1831 adm to the bar, and began practice. In 1833, in connection with Judge Wright, he established a law school in Cincinnati, which in 1835 was united with the coll. there, he continuing a prof. until 1844, and having, for a time, the exclusive charge of it; in 1842 he was app. pres. judge of the Hamilton C.C.P., and, after leaving that post, became editor of the Western Law Jour. Author of "Introduction to American Law;" a treatise on geometry, used as a school text-book; a discourse on the history of Ohio before the Ohio Hist. Soc., 1838; address at Miami U., 1832; "Dignity of the Law as a Profession," 1837; orations on J. Q. Adams, 1848, and on Daniel Webster, 1852; also speeches, articles in the N. A. Review, &c.

Walker, WILLIAM, filibuster, b. Nashville, Tenn., May 8, 1824; executed at Truxillo, Honduras, Sept. 12, 1860. He studied, but never practised, medicine; afterward studied law in Nashville; and, removing to New Orleans, became an editor of the Crescent, newspaper. In 1850 he went to California, where he was one of the editors of the San Francisco Herald, and afterward a lawyer at Marysville. In July, 1853, he organized an exped. for the conquest of Sonora, on the failure of which he surrendered himself to the U.S. officers in San Diego; was tried at San Francisco, May 15, 1854, for violating the neutrality laws, and acquitted. June 11, 1855, with 62 followers, he landed at Realejo, Nicaragua, and, after gaining two battles, took possession of Granada, Oct. 15, and was app generalissimo of the republic. Hostilities with Costa Rica having broken out, he was defeated near Guanacaste, Mar. 20, 1856; and at Rivas, Apr. 11, gained an advantage which put a temporary stop to the war. June 25, he caused himself to be elected pres. By his arbitrary acts a powerful insurrection was excited; and May 1, 1857, after several battles, Walker was obliged to surrender himself to Com. C. H. Davis of the U.S. sloop-of-war "St. Mary's," by whom he was taken to the U.S. Nov. 11, he again landed at Punta Arenas Nicaragua; but, Dec. 8, was compelled by Com. Paulding, U S.N., to surrender, and taken as a prisoner to New York. In June, 1860, he again left New Orleans, landing at Corps, Hd. Qrs. Baltimore, Md.; with 5,800 men intercepted Early marching upon Washington with 28,000, and July 9, 1864, fought the battle of Monocacy, Md. Though defeated, he gained his object; viz., time for Gen. Grant to re-enforce the capital from City Point. By order of Gen. Halleck, he was superseded by Gen. Ord; but, when Gen. Grant learned the particulars of the action, he immediately re-instated Gen W. in his command, and, in his official rep. for 1865, said, "On the 6th (July) the enemy (Early) occupied Hagerstown, moving a strong column toward Frederick City. Gen. Wallace, with Rickett's div. and his own command, the latter mostly new and undisciplined troops, pushed out from Baltimore with great promptness, and met the enemy in force on the Monocacy, near the crossing of the railroad bridge. His force was not sufficient to insure success: but he fought the enemy nevertheless; and, although it resulted in a defeat to our arms, yet he detained the enemy, and thereby served to enable Wright to reach Washington . . . before him." An acknowledgment that Gen. W. by his promptitude and firmness saved the capital from capture at a most important juncture in the war. Gen. W. was pres. of the commission app. to investigate Gen. Buell's operations in Tenn. and Ky.; member of court that tried the assassins of Pres. Lincoln; pres. of court that tried Capt. Wirz of Andersonville. Perry, and a statue of Shakspeare for the N. Y. Central Park. — Tuckerman.

Ward, NATHANIEL, clergyman and author, b. Haverhill, Suffolk, Eng., ab. 1578; d. Shenfield, Essex, Eng., ab. 1652. Cambridge U. 1603. His father John, the "painful minister" of Haverhill, had three sons, Samuel, Nathaniel, and John, in the church, of whom, according to Dr. Fuller in his "Worthies," people used to say that all of them put together would not make up his abilities. Nathaniel was bred a lawyer; travelled on the Continent with some merchants in Prussia and Denmark; devoted himself to divinity; and on his return became rector of Stondon Marcy, Essex. He was connected with the Ms. Company in 1630; was brought before Bishop Laud for nonconformity in 1631; was silenced in 1633; and arrived in N.E. in 1634. He immediately became pastor of the church at Agawam, or Ipswich, Rev. Thomas Parker being teacher. The latter having removed to Newbury, John Norton became in 1636 the colleague of Ward, who resigned in Feb. 1637 from impaired health. He was the author of the "Body of Liberties," adopted in Dec. 1641, — the first code of laws established in N. Eng. He preached the Ms. Election Sermon, June 2, 1641. In 1645 he was chosen by the General Court a member of a committee for the county of Essex to draw up laws to be submitted to the next legislature. Ward returned to England at the close of 1646. His "Simple Cobler of Aggawam," a quaint politico-religious tract, satirizing the affairs and manners of the Colony and the fashionable ladies of the day, but levelled mainly at the condition of England, was pub. at London, Jan. 30, 1647. In 1648 he became the minister at Shenfield, where he died. He was a celebrated wit, and was something of a poet, having written in 1648 a humorous satirical address to the London tradesmen turned preachers, entitled "Mercurius Anti-Mechanicus, or the Simple Cobler's Boy," &c. His "Simple Cobler" was reprinted at Boston in 1713 and 1843, and at Washington in 1844. Besides several tracts attributed to him, he pub. "A Sermon before the House of Commons, June 30, 1647;" "A Religious Retreat sounded to a Religious Army," 1647; "The Humble Petitions, Serious Suggestions, and Dutiful Expostulations, of some Freeholders of the Easterne Association, to the High and Hon. Parliament of Eng.," 1648; and "Discolliminum," a reply to "Bounds and Bonds," 1650. His son JOHN (b. Haverhill, Eng., 5 Nov. 1606, d. Haverhill, Ms., 27 Dec. 1693, Camb. U. 1630) was minister of Haverhill, Ms., from 1645 to his death, 27 Dec. 1693. — See Memoir by John Ward Dean, 8vo, 1868.

Ware, HENRY, D.D. (H.U. 1806), Hollis professor of divinity in H.U. (1805–45), b. Sherburne, Ms., Apr. 1, 1764; d. Cambridge, July 12, 1845. H.U. 1785. His father being a farmer of small means, his opportunities for education were limited. As his health was feeble, his two eldest brothers (his father having died when he was 15 years old) assisted him to procure a collegiate education. Oct. 24, 1787, he was ord. over the First Church in Hingham, where he continued till chosen prof. in 1805. The situation was one of great responsibility, on account of the controversies respecting it, which resulted in the separation of the Cong. Church of N.E. into the two sects called Unitarian and Orthodox. Among the writers on one side were Drs. Morse, Worcester, and Woods, and on the other Dr. Wm. E. Channing, Prof. Andrews Norton, and Prof. Ware himself, who about 1820 pub. his "Letters addressed to Trinitarians and Calvinists," in answer to the Letters of the Rev. Dr. Woods. The latter replied; and the discussion was continued by Dr. Ware in two other publications. In 1842 he pub. also one course of his academical lectures on the Evidences, Doctrines, and Ethics of Christianity, 2 vols. He was a man of pure tastes and simple manners, with a refined and highly-cultivated intellect, and a generous and affectionate heart.

Ware, HENRY, Jun., D.D., clergyman, son of the preceding, b. Hingham, Ms., Apr. 21, 1794; d. Framingham, Ms., Sept. 22, 1843. H.U. 1812. He spent two years as assist. instructor at Phillips (Exeter) Acad.; and was ord. pastor of the Second Unitarian Church in Boston, Jan. 1, 1817. He became the editor of the Christian Disciple, an organ of the Unitarian denomination, which afterward became the Christian Examiner; and took an active part in all the public associations of his denomination. In 1829–42 he was prof. of pulpit eloquence, and the pastoral care at H.U.; and in the summer of 1830 he visited different parts of Europe. In 1824 he delivered a poem, entitled "A Vision of Liberty," before the Phi Beta Kappa of Cambridge. Author of "Poem on the Celeb. of Peace," 1815; "Hints on Extemp. Preaching," 1824; "Recollections of Jotham Anderson;" on the "Formation of Christian Character," 1831; "Feast of the Tabernacle," a poem, 1837; "Life of the Saviour," 1832; "Memoir of Rev. Dr. Parker," 1834; a "Selection from the Writings of Dr. Priestley," 1835. A selection of his writings was pub. by Rev. Chandler Robbins, 4 vols. 1846; a Memoir by his bro. John Ware, M.D., appeared in 1846, 2 vols. His wife, MARY L. WARE, a woman of great elevation of mind and active benevolence, d. April, 1849.

Ware, JOHN, M.D. (H.U. 1816), bro. of the preceding, physician and author, b. Hingham, Ms., Dec. 19, 1795; d. Boston, Apr. 29, 1864. H.U. 1813. He began to practise in Duxbury, Ms., and in 1817 removed to Boston. From 1832 to 1858 he was prof. of the theory and practice of medicine in the medical dept. of H.U.; several years pres. of the Ms. Med. Soc., and also a member of the Am. Acad. of Arts and Sciences. He pub. medical lectures and discourses; essays on "Croup," on "Delirium Tremens," and on "Hemoptysis;" a vol. on the "Philosophy of Natural History;" a "Memoir of H. Ware, Jun.," 1846; "Hints to Young Men," 1850; "Success in the Medical Profession," &c., 1851. His wife, MARY GREENE, dau. of Mr. Chandler, b. Petersham, 1818, is author of "Elements of Character," 1854; "Thoughts in My Garden," 1862; "Death and Life," 1864.

Ware, WILLIAM, clergyman and author, b. Hingham, Ms., Aug. 3, 1797; d. Cambridge, Ms., Feb. 19, 1852. H.U. 1816; Camb. Theol. School, 1819. Son of Rev. Henry. He commenced preaching at Northborough; was settled successively in Brooklyn, Ct., and Burlington, Vt.; and from Dec. 18, 1821, to Oct. 19, 1836, was minister of the First Cong. Church in N.Y.; from June, 1837, to Apr. 1838, he was settled over the 2d Cong. Church in Waltham, Ms.; and in Dec. 1843 was settled at West Cambridge, but ill-health soon obliged him to give up preaching. He contrib. to the Knickerbocker Mag. "Letters from Palmyra," pub. in 2 vols. in 1837, better known under the present title of "Zenobia." A sequel to this work, now known as "Aurelian," appeared in 1838 with the title of "Probus." Removing to Cambridge in 1839, he for several years edited the Christian Examiner. "Julian" was pub. in 2 vols. in 1841; "American Unitarian Biography," 2 vols. 8vo, 1850; Memoir of Nath. Bacon, in Sparks's "Amer. Biog.," vol. 13. In 1848 he travelled one year in Europe; pub. after his return "Sketches of European Capitals," 1851; "Lectures on the Works and Genius of Washington Allston," 12mo, 1852; and was a frequent contributor to the Christian Examiner and other Unitarian periodicals.

Warner, COL. SETH, Revol. officer, b. Roxbury, Ct., May 17, 1743; d. there Dec. 26, 1784. He was early disting. by his energy, sound judgment, and manly and noble bearing. In 1765, with his father Dr. Benj. Warner, he removed to Bennington, in the New-Hampshire grants. During the dispute between N.Y. and the inhabitants of the "grants," over whom it claimed jurisdiction, Ethan Allen and Seth Warner were the leaders and champions of the people. They were outlawed by the State of N.Y.; and a reward was offered for the arrest of either. As second in com. he participated in the capture of Ticonderoga, and on the following day he took the important post of Crown Point, with its garrison and 113 cannon. Chosen col. July 27, 1775; in Sept. he was at the siege of St. John's under Montgomery, and defeated Gen. Carleton in the attempt for its relief. During the retreat of the Americans to Ticonderoga in May, 1776, Warner rendered valuable service. When Ticonderoga was evacuated on the night of July 4, 1777, the main body of the army took the road through Hubbardton and Castleton. At the former place the rear-guard was put under the com. of Warner, who was attacked by Fraser, July 7, and, after a severely-contested fight, was compelled to retreat. At the battle of Bennington, Warner's regiment arrived at the scene of action in season to repel and defeat the re-enforcement of the enemy under Braymen, and to share in the glory of that exploit. He remained in the service until 1782, when his constitution, though naturally strong and vigorous, gave way under the fatigue and hardships of the service, and he returned with his family to Roxbury. Seth Warner was over six feet in height, erect and well-proportioned. A Memoir by Daniel Chipman was pub. at Middlebury, 1848.

Dec. 5, 1842. In Sept. 1773 he was apprenticed to John Brown of Providence, a celebrated merchant, who in 1775 sent him with 1½ tons of powder to Washington's army at Cambridge, which was destitute of this necessary article. In 1777 he was sent to Charleston and other Southern ports with over $50,000 to be invested in cargoes for the European markets. His journal of this journey, subsequently pub., is the best account extant of the principal towns and villages of the Colonies at the time of the Revol. In Aug. 1779 he was bearer of despatches from the Amer. govt. to Franklin at Paris, and opened a commercial house at Nantes. Here, after 3 years of success, he lost by the financial reverses of the period the bulk of his property. He next visited Eng.; in 1784 went to Holland and Flanders, and returned to Newport in Dec.; in 1789 he went to Albany, where for 18 years he was an active promoter of public enterprises. After travelling some years in Europe, he pub. while in London an account of his pioneer trip in Western N.Y. Settled in 1807 in Pittsfield, Ms., and devoted himself to agriculture; founded the Berkshire Agric. Soc.; returned in 1816 to Albany, and organized the first agric. soc. in N.Y.; visited Michigan, examined the Lake region, and explored the route to Montreal, with a view to its improvement, and connection with Boston and N.Y. In 1828 he removed to Port Kent, on Lake Champlain. Besides frequent contributions to periodicals, he pub. some pamphlets and vols. on agric. and economical topics; "A Tour in Holland in 1784," in 1790; "A History of Agricultural Societies," 1820; "History of N.Y. Canals, 1788–1819." His Autobiog. and Journals were pub. in 1855 by his son WINSLOW COSSOUL (b. Albany, 22 Dec. 1803), also author of "Gen. View of Essex Co.;" "Treatise on Pract. Husbandry;" "Pioneer Hist. of Champlain Valley," 8vo, 1863; and a "Hist. of Essex Co.," 8vo, 1869.

Pathological Soc., and for several years its presiding officer. He pub. many able articles and reports of cases in the medical periodicals, and revised and edited with notes some manuals of anatomy.

Wayland, FRANCIS, D.D. (Un. Coll. 1827), LL.D. (1852), scholar and clergyman, b. N.Y. City, Mar. 11, 1796, of English parents; d. Providence, Sept. 26, 1865. Un. Coll. 1813. After studying medicine 3 years, in 1816 he studied at the Theol. Sem., Andover; and was tutor at Un. Coll. in 1816–21, a part of the time preaching to a cong. at Burnt Hills; in 1821–6 he was pastor of the First Baptist Church, Boston; in 1826 he was for a short time prof. of mathematics and nat. philos. at Un. Coll.; from Feb. 1827 to 1855 was pres. of Brown U.; and was afterward, for two or three years, pastor of the First Bapt. Church in Providence. Dr. Wayland manifested eminent ability in managing the affairs of B.U., largely increasing its reputation, and doubling the number of its students. He taught by lectures in place of the old text-books, and pub. works on "Moral Science," "Political Economy," and "Intell. Philosophy." In 1842 he pub. "Thoughts upon the Collegiate System of the U.S.," which led to much discussion. His other publications are "Letters on Slavery;" "Life of the Missionary, Dr. Judson," 1853; "University Sermons," 1838, subsequently pub. as "Salvation by Christ," 1858; "Limitations of Human Responsibility," 1840; "Memoir of Harriet Ware," 1850; "Notes on the Principles and Practices of Baptists," 1856; "Occas. Discourses," 1856; "Sermons to the Churches," 1858; "Letters on the Ministry," 1863. — See Memoir by his Sons Francis and H. L. Wayland, 2 vols. 8vo, 1867.

Wayne, GEN. ANTHONY, b. Chester Co., Pa., 1 Jan. 1745; d. Presque Isle, 15 Dec. 1796. His grandfather Anthony of Yorkshire com. a squadron of dragoons under King William at the battle of the Boyne, and came to Pa. in 1722. Isaac his father was an officer in Indian wars, and served in the Prov. legisl. Anthony was educated at the Phila. Acad., and, through the friendship of Dr. Franklin, was app. a land-agent in Nova Scotia, where he resided in 1765–6. Marrying in 1767, he was until 1774 a farmer and land-surveyor; member of the legisl. in 1774–5, and of various patriotic associations of the time. He raised a regt. in Sept. 1775; was made a col. 3 Jan. 1776; brig.-gen. 21 Feb. 1777. Disting. and wounded at Trois Rivières, Canada. At the Brandywine, 11 Sept. 1777, he was opposed to Knyphausen, and held his ground until the right of the Amer. army was turned. On the night of 20 Sept. he was surprised by Gen. Grey near the Paoli Tavern, and compelled to retreat with serious loss. Wayne demanded a court of inquiry, and was acquitted with the highest honor. At Germantown, where he led the attack of the right wing, he signalized himself, and was twice slightly wounded. For his conduct at Monmouth (28 June, 1778), he was especially mentioned in Washington's official report. His most brilliant achievement, however, was the storming of Stony Point, a strong post on the Hudson, on the night of 15 July, 1779. In this attack he was wounded in the head. Congress gave him a vote of thanks and a gold medal. After the mutiny of the Pa. line, Wayne, with the remnant of Pa. troops, joined Lafayette in Va. 7 June, 1781; at Green Spring, Va., 6 July, 1781, he was ordered to attack what was supposed to be only a rear-guard, but which proved to be the whole British army in order of battle within less than 100 paces. His course was at once sagacious and energetic. A well-executed bayonet-charge stopped the enemy, and gave Wayne time to retreat without loss. Present at Yorktown; ordered to Ga., he defeated Col. Brown, 20 May, 1782, and a month later the renowned Indian chieftain Guristersigo, who was killed; 14 Dec. 1782 he took possession of Charleston on its evacuation. He served in the Pa. Assembly in 1784–5, and in the conv. that ratified the U.S. Constitution. Apr. 3, 1792, he was made gen.-in-chief of the army engaged against the North-western Indians; 20 Aug. 1794 he gained a complete victory over them at the Maumee Rapids, "Fallen Timbers," which was followed by the treaty of Greenville, resulting in a long peace and a considerable accession of territory. Wayne, though by his bravery gaining the sobriquet of "Mad Anthony," was discreet and cautious, fruitful in expedients, quick in decision, and prompt in execution. "Wayne's Orderly-Book at Ticond.," with notes and app., was pub. by Munsell, 1859. — See Memoirs by H. N. Moore, Phila. 1845, and by John Armstrong in Sparks's Amer. Biog., vol. iv.; the Assault on Stony Point, by H. B. Dawson, 1863. His son Col. ISAAC (M.C. 1823–5) d. Chester Co., Pa., 25 Oct. 1852, a. 82.

Wayne, JAMES MOORE, LL.D. (N.J. Coll. 1849), judge, b. Savannah, Ga., 1790; d. Washington, D.C., July 5, 1867. N.J. Coll. 1808. He became a lawyer and politician; was two years a member of the State legisl.; mayor of Savannah 1823; was judge of the Superior Court 1824–9; M.C. 1829–35; took a prominent position as a debater; and was a supporter of Gen. Jackson, who app. him, 9 Jan. 1835, assoc. judge U.S. Sup. Court. His opinions upon admiralty jurisprudence are everywhere cited as high authority. In Congress he sustained free trade; opposed internal improvements by Congress, except of rivers and harbors; opposed a recharter of the U.S.

After practising a year in Boscawen, N H., he removed to Portsmouth, where he rose at once to full practice at a bar where Samue Dexter, Joseph Story, and Jeremiah Mason were prominent. M.C. in 1813–17, and placed on the com. of foreign affairs, he at once took rank with the foremost both for business and debate. In Aug. 1816 he removed to Boston. The famous Dartm. Coll. case, carried by appeal to Washington in 1817, placed him in the front rank of the American bar. Among the great causes argued by him before the U. S. Sup. Court were those of Gibbons and Ogden (steamer monopoly case), that of Ogden and Saunders (State insolvent laws), the Charles-river Bridge Case, the Alabama Bank Case, the Girard Will Case, and the R.I. Charter Case. In the trials of Goodridge at Newburyport, and the Knapps at Salem, Mr. Webster exhibited unsurpassed skill as a criminal lawyer. Member of the Ms. Const. Conv. of 1820, he spoke upon oaths of office, the basis of senatorial representation, and the independence of the judiciary. Dec. 22, 1820, he delivered his celebrated discourse at Plymouth on the anniv. of the landing of the Pilgrims. Others of this class of efforts were that on the laying of the corner-stone of the Bunker-hill Monument (June 17, 1825), and at its completion (June 17, 1843), and the eulogy on Adams and Jefferson, Aug. 2, 1826. He again entered Congress in Dec. 1823; made his famous speech on the Greek Revol.; and as chairman of the judiciary com. reported and carried through the house a complete revision of the criminal law of the U.S. In the 19th Congress he made a masterly speech on the proposed diplomatic Congress at Panama. Under the presidency of Mr. Adams he was the leader of the friends of the administration, — first in the house, and afterward in the senate, of which he was a member in 1827–39. His great speech in reply to Hayne, delivered in the senate Jan. 26 and 27, 1830, on Foote's resolution, has been declared, next to the Constitution itself, the most correct and complete exposition of the true powers and functions of the Federal Govt. This resolution related to the survey of the public lands; and the debate turned on the newly-declared doctrine of Calhoun, on the right of an individual State to nullify an act of Congress. In 1836 he received the electoral vote of Ms. for pres., and in 1840 was app. by Harrison sec. of state. While in this post, he negotiated the North-eastern boundary treaty in 1842, putting an end to a protracted and threatening dispute with Great Britain. In the spring of 1839 he visited Europe; in May, 1843, he retired from Mr. Tyler's cabinet; was rechosen to the senate in 1845, and strenuously opposed the annexation of Texas and the war with Mexico. In support of the compromises of 1850, he delivered his celebrated speech of March 7, which, by its concessions to the demands of slavery, proved highly distasteful to a large number of his supporters, and weakened his influence at home; in July, 1850, on the accession of Fillmore to the presidency, Mr. Webster was again made sec. of state, which post he filled at the time of his death. In Dec. 1850 the famous Hulsemann Letter was written. He paid much attention to agriculture, and resided much of the latter part of his life at Marshfield, Ms., or at his birthplace in N.H. In Jan. 1852 he argued the important India-rubber-patent cause at Trenton, his last great forensic effort. Early in May he was seriously injured by being thrown from his carriage near his farm in Marshfield, where the closing scenes of his life were passed. Mr. Webster's person was imposing, of commanding height, and well-proportioned, the head of great size, the eye deep-seated, large, and lustrous, his voice powerful and sonorous, his action appropriate and impressive. A consummate master of argument, he touched not less skilfully the chords of feeling. On great occasions, with or without preparation, he had no superior. He was remarkably fond of field-sports, particularly fishing, and was a good shot. The most complete edition of his collected works was that of 1851, in 6 vols. 8vo. A Memoir by George T. Curtis, his literary executor, app. in 2 vols. 1869–70. EDWARD his second son, major of Ms. vols., d. in the city of Mexico 1847. FLETCHER his youngest son, col. 12th Ms. Vols. (b. State courts, and one of the aldermen of the city. He returned there in 1822, and visited Europe in 1828. Early in 1843 he pub. "A Collection of Papers on Political, Literary, and Moral Subjects," and an elaborate treatise on "The Supposed Change in the Temperature of Winter." His last literary labor was the revision of the Appendix to his Dictionary, which he completed only a few days before his death. Of the "Elementary Spelling-Book" nearly 50,000,000 copies have been sold; and, during the preparation of the Dictionary, the entire support of his family was derived from its copyright. His Dictionary has been revised since his death by his son-in-law, Prof. Goodrich, and others. Dr. W.'s other works are a "History of the U.S.," revised in 1838; "Letters to a Young Gentleman commencing his Education," 1823; "Manual of Useful Studies," 1832; "The Prompter;" and a "History of Animals." — Allibone.

Wedderburne, ALEXANDER, Baron Loughborough (1780) and Earl of Rosslyn (1801), b. Edinburgh, Feb. 13, 1733; d. Bayles, Berkshire, Jan. 3, 1805. U. of Edinburgh. He was called to the Scottish bar at 19; removed to London; entered the Inner Temple in 1753; was adm. to the English bar in 1757; and was specially disting. in the great Douglas case in 1768–9. As a member of parliament he was an able supporter of Grenville and Lord North; became solicitor-gen. Jan. 26, 1771, and was conspicuous in defence of Lord Clive. In Jan. 1774, when the petition of Massachusetts for the removal of Hutchinson and Oliver was laid before the privy council, Wedderburne defended them in a speech in which he made a gross and insulting attack upon Franklin, the agent of the petitioners. In 1778 he was made atty.-gen., and in 1780 chief justice C. C. P.; in April, 1783, he assisted North in forming the famous coalition ministry, in which he was the first commiss. of the great seal. In Jan. 27, 1793–1801, he was lord high chancellor under Mr. Pitt. When George III. heard that he was dead, he remarked, "He has not left a greater knave behind him in my dominions."

Weed, GEN. STEPHEN H., b. N.Y. 1834; killed at Gettysburg, Pa., July 2, 1863. A graduate of the N.Y. Free Acad. West Point, 1854. Served against the Western Indians 1857–60; and, when the Rebellion broke out, was made a capt. of artillery. He served under McClellan on the Peninsula, at Manassas, at South Mountain, and Antietam; and was made brig.-gen. 6 June, 1863, for gallantry at Chancellorsville, Va. At the time of his death, he com. the 3d brigade of regulars.

Weed, THURLOW, journalist and politician, b. Cairo, N.Y., Nov. 15, 1797. At 10 he was a cabin-boy upon the Hudson River; at 12 he entered a printing-office at Catskill; was employed in several different newspaper-offices; was a vol. on the northern frontier in the war of 1812; established a newspaper in his own name on coming of age; edited the Anti-Masonic Enquirer in 1826–7; and was twice elected to the Assembly. His tact as a party manager, and his services in 1827–30 in securing the election of De Witt Clinton as gov., led to his selection as a competent person to oppose to the "Albany Regency," a body who had the management of the Democ. party in N.Y. In 1830 he accordingly removed to Albany, and assumed the editorship of the Albany Evening Journal. Although a leader, first of the Whig, and afterward of the Republican party, he declined all political office. He was prominent in procuring the nominations of Harrison in 1836 and 1840, of Gen. Taylor in 1848, and of Gen. Scott in 1852. He warmly advocated the election of Fremont in 1856, and of Lincoln in 1860, although he had advocated the nomination of Mr. Seward. He visited Europe in Nov. 1861 in a semi-diplomatic capacity; returned home in June, 1862, and shortly afterward withdrew from the Journal. He published "Letters from Europe and the West Indies," 8vo, 1866; Reminiscences, in the Atlantic Monthly, 1870; and has contributed to periodicals.

Weedon, GEN. GEORGE, Revol. officer, was an innkeeper and postmaster of Fredericksburg, Va., and an active and zealous politician before the war. Made lieut.-col. 3d Va. Regt. Feb. 13, col. 1st Regt. 12 Aug., 1776; and 24 Feb., 1777, brig.-gen. He was in the battles of Brandywine and Germantown, but, in consequence of some dissatisfaction about rank, left the service while the army was at Valley Forge. At Brandywine he commanded the brigade in Greene's division which rendered such valuable service by stopping the British pursuit, and saving the routed army. He resumed the com. of a brigade in 1780, and com. the Va. militia at Gloucester during the siege of Yorktown in Oct. 1781.

Weeks, JOHN M., b. Litchfield, Ct., 22 May, 1788; d. Salisbury, Vt. (whither his parents removed in 1789), 1 Sept. 1858. in London, and was many years rector of Mt. Vernon parish (at the time Washington attended there), and subsequently a book-agent for Matthew Carey of Phila. He travelled extensively over the Southern States in this capacity, mingling with the people at large assemblies and at courts, drawing crowds of listeners, whom he would address upon the merits of his works, interspersing his remarks with anecdotes and humorous sallies. He wrote and sold a pamphlet entitled "The Drunkard's Looking-Glass," illustrated by cuts. With this in hand, he entered taverns, and, addressing the inmates, would mimic the extravagances of an inebriate, and sell the pamphlet. He was a man of much benevolence and wit. Author of Lives of Marion, Franklin, Penn, and Washington, the latter of which passed through 30 or 40 editions. Others of his tracts were "Hymen's Recruiting Sergeant," "God's Revenge against Murder," "God's Revenge against Adultery." For his "Life of Marion," Horry, one of Marion's companions, furnished the facts. The romantic manner in which his statements were served up led to a corresp. between the two authors.

Weightman, Col. Richard Hanson, b. Md.; killed at the battle of Wilson's Creek, Mo., Aug. 10, 1861. Son of Gen. Weightman. Expelled from West Point in April, 1837, for cutting a brother-cadet in the face in a personal rencounter. With the same knife he killed the Santa Fé trader, F. X. Xaubrey, in a quarrel. Capt. of Mo. art., and disting. under Col. Doniphan at the battle of Sacramento, Mex.; paymaster U.S.A. 1848–9; provis. U.S. senator from New Mex. 1850; M.C. from N. Mex. 1851–3; col. Mo. Wells, HORACE, dentist, one of the claimants of the discovery of anæsthesia, b. Hartford, Vt., Jan. 21, 1815; d. N. Y. City, Jan. 24, 1848. After an academical education, he began the study of dentistry in Boston in 1834, but removed to Hartford in 1836. As early as 1840 he experimented upon the possibility of preventing pain in dental operations by various narcotics. In 1844 he used nitrous-oxide gas successfully for the extraction of teeth, and in Dec. 1844 addressed the medical class of Dr. Warren in Boston on the subject. After the application of Drs. Jackson and Morton for a patent, in Sept. 1846, Dr. Wells sailed for France, and succeeded in convincing the Medical Society of Paris that he had made a valuable discovery, as is shown by resolutions adopted by them after a 3-days' discussion. He returned in the spring of 1847, and in March pub. a history of his discovery. The controversy which ensued impaired his already enfeebled health, and produced mental aberration, under the influence of which he committed suicide. The evidence of his claim was placed before Congress in 1853 by Hon. Truman Smith, and was subsequently pub. under the title of "An Examination of the Question of Anæsthesia," N.Y. 1860. — See also art. "Morton, W. T. G."

Congress in 1775; speaker in 1776; and after the fall of Savannah in 1779, as pres. of the exec. council, exercised the functions of gov.; pres. of the conv. which ratified the Federal Constitution at Augusta, Jan. 2, 1788.

Wertmuller, ADOLPH ULRIC, painter, b. Stockholm, 1750; d. near Marcus Hook, Pa., Oct. 5, 1811. He studied and pursued his profession in Paris some years, and came to Phila. in 1794, but returned to Europe in 1796. He returned to Phila. in 1800, and obtained an income by exhibiting his picture of Danaë, which he sold for $1,500. He left a portrait of Washington.

Wesley, CHARLES, poet and clergyman, b. Epworth, Dec. 18, 1708; d. London, March 29, 1788. Oxford U. 1732. He was a conspicuous member of the small religious society from which Arminian-Methodism may be said to have sprung; and in 1735, after having been ord. deacon and priest, accompanied his bro. John on a mission to Ga. in the capacity of sec. to Gov. Oglethorpe. He labored assiduously as a preacher among the Indians and colonists; returned to Eng. in 1736; and soon after commenced his brilliant and successful career as a Methodist preacher. His sons CHARLES and SAMUEL acquired great reputation for their musical talents. Of the hymns now in use by the Wesleyans, 625 are by Charles Wesley. A vol. of his sermons, with a Memoir, was pub. 1816; Journal, with notes by Rev. Thomas Jackson, 1841, 2 vols. 8vo.

Wesley, JOHN, the celebrated founder of the sect of Methodists, b. Epworth, in Lincolnshire, June 17, 1703; d. Mar. 2, 1791. Oxf. U. 1726. Son of Samuel, rector of Epworth. Disting. at Oxford by his adroitness in argument, as well as his classical and theological attainments. Ord. deacon in 1725. In 1730 he and his brother Charles, with a few other students, formed themselves into a small society on principles of greater austerity and devotion than prevailed in the university, receiving the name of Methodists. He soon became leader of the association, and upon the death of his father in 1735, during which year the celebrated Whitefield joined his society, accomp. Oglethorpe to Ga. to preach the gospel among the settlers and Indians. For some time, his labors as a preacher promised to be successful; but he soon rendered himself offensive to the colonists by his severe and injudicious conduct. He passed six months in Georgia without possessing a single shilling. His ascetic practices and numerous eccentricities created some doubts as to the solidity of his judgment. On his return to Eng. early in 1738 he commenced itinerant preaching, and gathered many followers. The churches being shut against him, he built spacious meeting-houses in London, Bristol, and other places. For some time he was united with Whitefield; but, differences arising upon the doctrine of election, they separated, and the Methodists were denominated according to their respective leaders. Wesley was indefatigable in his labors, and almost continually engaged in travelling over England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland. He pub. some vols. of hymns, numerous sermons, political tracts, and controversial treatises. He was the most successful preacher of modern times, and was the law-giver, as well as the apostle, of Arminian-Methodism.

Academy of Arts and Sciences in 1781; was prof. of mathem. in the Pr.-Ep. Sem. at Phila. in 1784–6; prof. of mathem. and nat. philos. in B.U. 1786–99; postmaster of Prov., 1802–13.

West, BENJAMIN, a celebrated painter, b. near Springfield, Pa., Oct. 10, 1738; d. London, March 10, 1820. His parents were Quakers; but, perceiving in their son an innate propensity for the art of drawing, they allowed him to cultivate his talents in opposition to the rigid principles of their sect. Accordingly, after having for a short time served as a soldier under Gen. Forbes, West, who had removed to Phila., in 1756 commenced portrait-painting, which profession he subsequently exercised in New York; in 1760 he visited Italy and France, and remained some time at Paris; in 1763 he arrived in Eng., and met such encouragement that he took up his permanent residence there. By the order of George III., he executed his picture of "The Departure of Regulus from Rome," which procured him much reputation. At the foundation of the Royal Acad. in 1768, he became a member.

and in 1792 succeeded Sir Joshua Reynolds as pres. Among the earlier productions of his pencil, that which attracted most notice was his painting of "The Death of Gen. Wolfe," which, by representing for the first time in an historical picture the modern costume, occasioned a revolution in art. The British Institution presented him with 3,000 guineas for a painting of "Christ Healing the Sick." One of the latest of his great works was a representation of "Death on the Pale Horse," from the Revelation. In 1817 he lost his wife, a Miss Shewell of Phila. As a painter he is celebrated for gracefulness of execution and harmony of coloring. — See Life by J. Galt, 8vo, Phila. 1816.

West, SAMUEL, D.D. (H.U. 1793), minister of New Bedford, Ms., b. Yarmouth, March 4, 1730; d. Tiverton, R.I., Sept. 24, 1807. H. U. 1754. Engaged in early life in farming. His intelligence led some discerning neighbors to give him a liberal education. He was ord. ab. 1764. In 1765 he became a partisan of the Whigs; wrote forcibly for the newspapers; and deciphered the treasonable letter of Dr. Church. He was a member of the conv. for framing the constitution of Ms., and for the adoption of that of the U.S.; and was a member of the Academies of Sciences at Phila. and at Boston. He was an original thinker and an independent inquirer. He pub. some sermons, and "Essays on Liberty and Necessity," 1793–5, — a reply to Edwards on the Will.

West, STEPHEN, D.D. (Dartm. 1792), clergyman, b. Tolland, Ct., Nov. 13, 1735; d. Stockbridge, Ms., May 15, 1819. Y. C. 1755. His father Matthew dying when he was an infant, his early character was formed by his mother, Lydia Gardiner, a woman of strong mental power. Educated at the public schools of Salem. At the age of 14 he was a contrib. to a Salem newspaper. He was subsequently employed in a broker's office in Boston; became a member of the Merc. Lib. Assoc., and was soon a leader in debate and composition; and, shortly after the erection of the Merchants' Exchange, he became supt. of the news-room, which in 1860 he gave up for the exclusive pursuit of literature. He deliv. a poem before the Merc. Lib. Assoc. Sept. 29, 1840, which was full of playful humor and satirical hits. His "Essay on Macaulay," in 1843, increased his fame, and drew from the brilliant historian and essayist a letter expressive of high regard. He has contrib. to the N. A. Review, Christian Examiner, and other periodicals. Many of these articles appear in his vols. of Lectures and Essays. He has delivered lectures of striking merit for the literary societies of Brown, Dartmouth, and Amherst, besides those delivered at the lyceums of the cities and towns of the Middle and Northern States. In 1850 he was the Fourth-of-July orator for Boston, on "Washington and the Principles of the American Revolution." In the spring of 1859 he delivered a course of 12 lectures before the Lowell Institute, Boston, on "The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth," pub. in 1869. A new vol. of essays, "Success and its Conditions," app. in 1871; also a new edition of his works in 6 vols.

Williams, JOHN, jurist, b. Hanover Co., Va.; d. Granville Co., N. C., Oct. 1799. He was one of the first judges under the State const. of N. C. in 1777–90, and a member of the Old Congress in 1778–9.

Williams, JOHN ("Anthony Pasquin"), b. London; d. Brooklyn, N.Y., Oct. 12, 1818. Educated at Merchant Tailors' School, and originally intended for the church, but preferred literature, and was employed as a translator by the London booksellers. He edited several journals in Dublin; and in 1784 assisted Henry Bate Dudley on the Morning Herald. A violent quarrel soon severed this connection. In 1787 he was corresp. for the Universal Register. Two vols. of his poems were pub. Lond. 1789. While in Ireland, his violent denunciation of govt. brought on him its vengeance; a heavy fine was imposed upon him: and he was adjudged by Lord Kenyon, in 1797, "a common libeller." He came soon after to the U.S., where he edited a Democ. newspaper. Also author of "Legislative Biog.," 8vo, 1795; "The Hamiltoniad," Boston, 1804; "Life of Alex. Hamilton," Boston, 1804; "Dramatic Censor," 8vo, 1811. — See Allibone; Europ. Mag., 1789.

Williams, COL. JOHN, soldier and senator, b. Surry Co., N.C., Jan. 29, 1778; d. near Knoxville, Aug. 10, 1837. Son of a disting. Revol. patriot. Was app. capt. 6th Inf. In the latter part of 1812 he raised a regt. of vols., and marched at their head into Florida; app. col. 39th U. S. Inf. 18 June, 1813, with which he went to New Orleans; in Dec. 1813 he joined Gen. Jackson, and participated in the battle of Horse-shoe Bend; U. S. senator 1815–23; several years chairman of its military committee. From Dec. 9, 1825, to March, 1827, he was minister to the republic of Central America, and was subsequently a member of the State senate.

Williams, JOHN, D.D. (Col. and Union Colls. 1847), Prot.-Epis. bishop of Ct. (consec. 29 Oct. 1851), b. Deerfield, Ms., 30 Aug. 1817. Trin. Coll. 1835. Ord. deacon 1838; priest 1841; rector of St. George's, Schenectady, 1842. Pres. Trin. Coll., Hartford, 1848–53. Succeeded to the episcopate on the death of Bishop Brownell, Jan. 1865. Author of "Ancient Hymns of the Church;" "Thoughts on the Gospel Miracles;" "Inaug. Discourse Trin. Coll.," 1849; also sermons, addresses, and articles in the Church Review, &c. Edited Browne's Exposition of the 39 Articles, 1865.

Williams, JOHN FOSTER, a naval officer of the Revol.; d. Boston, June 24, 1814, a. 70. He was brought up to the sea, and early in 1780 received the com. of "The Protector," a 20-gun ship built by the State of Ms.; July 9, 1780, he fell in with the letter-of-marque "Admiral Duff" (32 guns and 150 men), which, after an action of an hour and a half, took fire, and was blown up. Late in Oct. 1780 he again sailed from Boston; cruised a while in the W. Indies, where he took several rich prizes; but on his return-voyage, falling in with two armed ships of superior force, he was obliged to surrender, remaining a prisoner until the peace. In the celebration of the adoption of the Federal Constitution by Ms. in Feb. 1788, Capt. Williams held a conspicuous place. From 1790 to his d. he was com. of a revenue-cutter.

Williams, GEN. JONATHAN, b. Boston, 1752; d. Phila. 16 May, 1815. Son of Jona., a Revol. patriot. He received a good education; was placed in a counting-house, and made several commercial voyages to the W. Indies and to Europe. He was in Eng. in 1770 and '73, where he was kindly received by Dr. Franklin, his grand-uncle, and was intrusted with letters and communications of political importance. Visiting France in 1777, he was app. U. S. commercial agent, and in 1785 returned with Franklin to the U.S. He was several years a judge of the C.C.P. in Phila. ALEX. JOHN was killed in defence of Fort Erie, 15 Aug. 1814.

Williams, GEN. OTHO HOLLAND, b. Prince George Co., Md., in March, 1749; d. July 16, 1794. His ancestors were Welsh, and came to America soon after Lord Baltimore became proprietor of Md. At twelve he was left an orphan, and was placed in the office of the clerk of his native county, and afterward in that of Baltimore, of which he had the principal direction. In the beginning of the Revol. struggle he was app. lieut. of a rifle company, and marched to the Amer. camp near Boston. In 1776 a rifle regt. was organized, in which he was app. major; it formed part of the garrison of Fort Washington, N.Y., when that post was captured by the British, and gained great honor by the gallant manner in which it withstood the attack of the Hessian column to which it was opposed. Major Williams was wounded and taken, but was soon exchanged. App. col. 6th Md. Regt., with which, soon after the reduction of Charleston, he accomp. Baron De Kalb to S.C.; and, when Gen. Gates assumed the com. of the Southern army, he was made adj.-gen., in which station he remained until the close of the war. He gained great distinction in the disastrous battle of Camden; performed efficient service during Greene's celebrated retreat, in which he com. the light corps which acted as a rear-guard. He seconded Greene at Guilford and Hobkirk; and, by his brilliant charge at Eutaw, he decided the fortune of the day. In May, 1782, he was made a brig.-gen.; coll. of customs for the State of Md. until his death. — See Life by Tiffany, 8vo, 1851.

Williams, REUEL, LL.D. (Bowd. 1855), lawyer and senator, b. Augusta, Me., June 2, 1783; d. July 25, 1862. Adm. to the bar in 1802, he was a partner with Judge Bridge, and acquired high reputation; member of the legisl. 1822–6, and of the senate in 1827–8; again in the house in 1829–32; U.S. senator 1837–43; was active in the railroad project of uniting Augusta with Boston; and for 12 years was the manager of the road.

Williams, ROGER, founder of R.I., and the apostle of civil and religious liberty in America, b. Wales, 1599; d. Providence, Apr. 1683. Educated by Sir Ed. Coke at Sutton's Hospital, now the Charter House, 1621–4, and at Pemb. Coll., Camb., 1625–6. He became a nonconformist minister, and sought an asylum in America, arriving at Boston Feb. 9, 1631. In April he was chosen assist. to Mr. Skelton in the ministry at Salem; and asserting at once his views of religious toleration, the independence of conscience of the civil magistrate, and the separation of Church and State, he was in a few months obliged to withdraw to Plymouth, where he was for two years assist. to Mr. Ralph Smith. Returning to Salem in 1633, he succeeded Skelton, and was driven thence by an order of the Gen. Council, late in 1635, into exile for "his new and dangerous opinions against the authority of magistrates." Permitted to remain till spring, he persisted in preaching in his own house; and orders were sent in Jan. 1636 to seize him, and send him to Eng. He fled, making his memorable journey in the winter-season through what was then a wilderness, and founded the city of Providence. Here he maintained friendly relations with the Indians, and promoted the settlement of R.I. Embracing the sentiments of the Baptists, he was baptized March, 1639; but, entertaining doubts of the correctness of their principles, the church he had formed was dissolved. He studied the Indian language, and endeavored to teach the gospel to the Indians. In 1643 he sailed from New Amsterdam for Eng. to procure a charter. On his voyage he wrote his "Key into the Language of America" (Lond. 1643). He obtained a charter in 1644, and landed in Boston in Sept. Before returning, he pub. in Lond. "Mr. Cotton's Letter, lately printed, Examined and Answered;" and also his celebrated work, which embodies the principles of toleration, — "The Bloody Tenent of Persecution for Cause of Conscience." At the close of 1651 he again visited Eng. to secure the confirmation of the charter, in which he succeeded. Cotton having replied to his "Bloody Tenent," Williams pub. (Lond. 1652) "The Bloody Tenent yet more Bloody by Mr. Cotton's Endeavour to wash it White in the Blood of the Lambe," &c.; and at the same time "The Hireling Ministry none of Christ's;" also "Experiments of Spiritual Life and Health, and their Preservatives." During this second visit in Eng., he was for a time engaged in teaching. He was intimate with Milton, Cromwell, and Sir Henry Vane, with whom he passed much time. He was chosen pres. of the Colony in Sept. 1654, which office he held 2½ years. His influence with the Indians enabled him to render signal services to the Colonies around him by averting from them the calamities of savage war; but they refused to admit R.I. into the N. England league, and even put obstacles in the way of preparing the means of defence. His Memoir has been written by J. D. Knowles (1833), Wm. Gammell (1846), and Romeo Elton (1853). The Narraganset Club in 1866 pub. a vol. containing a biog. of Williams by R. A. Guild, Williams's Key into the Language of America (edited by J. Hammond Trumbull), and Cotton's Letter with Williams's Reply. Though maintaining the rights of the Quakers, Williams held a controversy with Fox and his disciples, an account of which is the last of his pubs., — "George Fox digged out of his Burrowes" (1676).

Wilson, Henry, statesman, b. Farmington, N.H., Feb. 16, 1812. The son of poor parents, he was brought up on a farm, and had little schooling, but, accumulating a little money by shoemaking at Natick, Ms., studied for a while in the academies at Stafford, Wolfborough, and Concord. He resumed shoemaking at Natick in 1838. In 1840 he took an active part in the presidential canvass, and made upward of 60 speeches in behalf of Harrison. In the next 5 years he was 3 times elected from Natick to the legisl., and twice a senator from Middlesex Co. An active and zealous opponent of slavery, he made an elaborate speech on his resolution in the legisl., declaring the unalterable hostility of Ms. to the further extension and longer continuance of slavery in America. Delegate to the Whig nat. conv. of 1848, and, on the rejection of antislavery resolutions, withdrew from it, and took a prominent part in organising the Free-soil party. He then bought the Boston Republican, a daily newspaper, which he edited for two years. In 1851 and '52 he was pres. of the State Senate; in 1852 he was pres. of the Free-soil nat. conv. at Pittsburg. He took a prominent part in the Const. Conv. of 1853, and was the Free-soil candidate for gov., but was defeated. He was elected to the U.S. senate in 1855, where he has ever since been conspicuous. For a brief period in 1855 he was associated with the American party, but, on the adoption of a proslavery platform by its national council, withdrew from it, and took an active share in organising the Republ. party. He has taken part in all important debates in the senate, and made elaborate speeches on Kansas, the transportation bill, the expenses of the govt., the tariff, the Pacific Railroad, and many other topics. His speech in defence of free labour in reply to Senator Hammond of S.C., March, 1858, attained an immense circulation through the free States. In March, 1861, he was made chairman of the com. on military affairs, a post which the civil war rendered one of great labour and responsibility. In the session of 1861-2 he introduced the bills abolishing slavery in the Dist. of Col., and for abolishing the "black

He resigned 27 Apr. 1861; entered the Confed. service; was soon made a brig.-gen., but was not actively employed. He com. the post of Richmond; had charge of Libby Prison, Belle Isle, and finally of Andersonville, Ga. His cruelty to prisoners rendered him infamous.

Winds, GEN. WILLIAM, Revol. officer, b. Southold, L.I., ab. 1727; d. near Dover, Morris Co., N. J., 1789. He was one of the founders of the Presb. Church in Rockaway, and bequeathed to it more than half his large property. In 1775 he was lieut.-col. in Lord Stirling's regt., and was a col. in 1776 at Ticonderoga. He was a large, athletic man, and had a most powerful voice.

Winebrenner, JOHN, founder of a religious sect, called by him the "Church of God," but generally termed Winebrennerians. Originally a minister of the German Ref. Church, he took charge, in 1821, of a small cong. at Harrisburg, Pa., from which he withdrew in October, 1830, and founded a new sect. The church has 3 positive ordinances, — baptism, feet-washing, and the Lord's supper. Two things are essential to the validity of baptism; viz., faith and immersion. The elders meet annually, while a general eldership of delegates from the annual elderships is held every 3 years. The denomination has a domestic and foreign missionary society, and a printing-establishment for its publications. Its organ is the Church Advocate, a weekly.

Wines, ENOCH COBB, D.D. (Mid. 1853), LL.D. (Wash. Coll. 1859), teacher and author, b. Hanover, N. J., Feb. 17, 1806. Mid. Coll 1827. He became principal of an acad. at St. Alban's, and afterward assist. teacher in a female sem. in Alexandria, Va., and next opened a school in Washington City. In 1829 he taught on board the ship "Constellation," in which he visited the Mediterranean. In 1833 he took charge of the Edge-hill School, Princeton, N. J.; in 1838 became prof. of languages in the Central High School of Phila.; in 1844 founded a boarding-school in Burlington, N. J., where he remained 4 years. In Jan. 1849 he was licensed to preach by the Cong. board of R.I., and has since preached in various places. In 1853 became prof. in Wash. Coll., Pa.; and in July, 1859, took charge of a literary institution, styled the "City U. of St. Louis." Has latterly been engaged in a mission for the organization of an International Prison Congress. He has pub. "Two Years and a Half in the American Navy," 2 vols. 1832; "Hints on a System of Popular Education," 1837; "How shall I Govern my School?" 1838; "Commentaries on the Laws of the Ancient Hebrews," 1852; "A Trip to Boston," 1838; "A Peep at China," 8vo; Monthly Journal of Education; "Essay on the Advantages of Studying the Classic Languages;" "Lecture on Education as a Source of Wealth;" "Treatise on Regeneration," 1863; "Essay on Temptation," 1865; "Promises of God," 1868; besides contribs. to periodicals.

Wingate, PAINE, jurist, b. Amesbury, Ms., May 14, 1739; d. Stratham, N.H., March 7, 1838. H.U. 1759. Gr.-grandson of JOHN of Dover, 1660; grandson of Col. JOSHUA (b. Dover, N.H., Feb. 2, 1680, d. Hampton, Feb. 9, 1769), who was at the capture of Louisburg, 1745; son of PAINE, minister of Amesbury 1726–86 (H.U. 1723). He was ord. Cong. minister of Hampton Falls, N.H., Dec. 14, 1763; dism. March 18, 1771; M.C. in 1787; U.S. senator 1789–93; again M.C. 1793–5; and a judge of the Superior Court of N.H. 1798–May, 1809. His wife, a sister of Timothy Pickering, d. Jan 7, 1843, a. 100 years and 8 months.

Wingfield, EDWIN MARIA, merchant of London, a member of a disting. family; was first pres. of the Colony of Va. under the patent of 10 Apr. 1606. In consequence of disagreements, he returned to Eng. in 1608. Capt. John Smith gives him a very bad character. Charles Deane in 1860 edited, with Notes and an Introd., "A Discourse of Virginia" by Wingfield, first printed from the original MS. in the Lambeth Library.

Winslow, CHARLES FREDERICK, M.D. (H.U. 1834), b. Nantucket, Ms., 1811. App. consul to Payta, Peru, 1862. Author of "Cosmography," 12mo, 1853; "Preparation of the Earth," &c., 1854; "The Cooling Globe," 1865; "Force and Nature," &c., 8vo, 1869.

grant brothers; and, in the first conf. with Massasoit, offered himself as a hostage, and won the attachment of the chief, which he strengthened in 1623 by curing him of a severe illness. In 1623–4 he made two voyages to Europe as agent for the Colony. While in Eng. in 1635, as agent for the Colony, Archbishop Laud imprisoned him in the Fleet Prison for 17 weeks on the charges of having taught in the church, being a layman, and performing marriage as a magistrate. In 1649 he again went to Eng.; aided in organizing the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in N.E., and was engaged in various public affairs. In 1655 Cromwell made him one of 3 commiss. to superintend an exped. against the Spaniards in the W. Indies, and he died in that service. He pub. "Good Newes from N. England," 1623; "Relation about Indians;" "Hypocrisie Unmasked;" "A Brief Narrative of the True Grounds or Cause of the First Planting of N. England;" "The Danger of tolerating Levellers;" "Glorious Progress of the Gospell among the Indians," 1649; "New England's Salamander Discovered," &c., 1647; "A Platform of Church Discipline in New England," 1653.

Winslow, Hubbard, D.D. (Ham. Coll. 1858), clergyman and author, b. Williston, Vt., Oct. 30, 1799; d. there Aug. 13, 1864. Y.C. 1825. He studied theology; was settled pastor of the First Church at Dover, Dec. 4, 1828; dism. Nov. 3, 1831; pastor of the Bowdoin-st. Church, Boston, Sept. 26, 1832–Mar. 1844; from 1844 to 1853 he had charge of the Mt.-Vernon, or Beacon-Hill, Sem. for Young Ladies, in Boston; afterward travelled some months in Europe; in 1857–9 preached to the First Presb. Church in Geneva, N.Y.; and in 1861 was pastor of the 50th-st. Presb. Church. Among his pubs. are "Young Man's Aid;" "Sermons on Christian Doctrines;" "Discourses on the Trinity;" "Social and Domestic Duties;" "Are you a Christian?" "Elements of Intellect. Philos.;" "Appropriate Sphere of Woman," 1837; "Woman as She Should Be," 1837; "Relation of the Natural Sciences to Revelation," 1839; "Design and Mode of Baptism," 1842; "History of the First Presb. Church and of the Village of Geneva, N.Y.," 1859; "Moral Philosophy," 1856; "The Hidden Life," 1862. He delivered numerous addresses on educational topics, contrib. to the Educational Journal, edited the Religious Magazine, and wrote articles for various reviews. He was an able controversialist and an impressive preacher.

Winslow, John, maj.-gen., b. Marshfield, Ms., 27 May, 1702; d. Hingham, Ms., 17 Apr. 1774. Grandson of Gov. Josiah. Capt. in the unfortunate Cuba exped. in 1740. He was the principal actor in the tragedy of the expulsion of the hapless Acadians from Nova Scotia in 1755; and it is a singular fact, that, 20 years after, nearly every person of Winslow's lineage was for political reasons, by the force of events, transplanted to the very soil from which the Acadians were expelled. Winslow was com.-in-chief at Fort Wm. Henry, on Lake George, in 1756; a major-gen. in the exped. against Canada in 1758–9; and was an officer of courage and ability. App. pres. judge of C.C.P. for Plymouth Co. in 1762; Prov. councillor and member of the Ms. legisl. during the Stamp-Act difficulties. An original founder of the town of Winslow, Me., in 1766. His son Dr. Isaac d. Marshfield in 1819, a. 80.

Winslow, John A., rear-adm. U.S.N., b. Wilmington, N.C., Nov. 19, 1810. Descended from a bro. of Gov. Edward. Midshipm. Feb. 1, 1827; lieut. Dec. 9, 1839; com. Sept. 14, 1855; capt. July 16, 1862; commo. June 19, 1864; rear-adm. 1870. Attached to the frigate "Cumberland" in the attack on Tabasco; and in various skirmishes on the Mexican coast 1845–7; in the Mpi. flotilla 1861–2; at Fort Pillow; com. exped. up the White River for the relief of Gen. Curtis in June, 1862; com. "Kearsarge" 1863–4. June 19, 1864, he sunk the Confed. steamer "Alabama," Capt. Semmes, off Cherbourg, France. The action was fought while the two vessels were steaming at the rate of 7 or 8 miles an hour, and every few minutes sheering so as to bring their broadsides to bear, being forced to fight in circles, "swinging steadily around an ever-changing centre." After they had described 7 circles, and had reduced their distance from a mile to about a quarter of a mile, "The Alabama" began to sink. "The Kearsarge" lost only 3 killed and wounded. For this gallant action Capt. Winslow was made commodore. Com. Gulf squad. 1866–7; d. Boston Highlands, Sep. 29, 1873.

Winslow, Josiah, first native-born gov. of Plymouth, son of Gov. Edward, b. Marshfield, Ms., 1629; d. there Dec. 18, 1680. He had the command of a military company in Marshfield as early as 1652; in 1656 he captured Alexander, eldest son of Massasoit, and defeated his plans against the Colony; in 1658 was app. major, then commander of the military of the Colony; in 1675 he was gen.-in-chief of the whole force of the U. Colonies raised in King Philip's Indian war. One of the commiss. of the U. Colonies in 1658, he was re-elected for 13 years. He was chosen one of the deputies in 1657, and until 1673 one of the assists., when he was elected gov., which office he held until his death. He was tolerant in an age when that virtue was exceedingly rare. His wife Penelope, dau. of Herbert Pelham, whom he m. in 1657, d. Dec. 7, 1703, a. 73.

Winslow, Miron, D.D. (H. U. 1858), LL.D. (Mid. Coll. 1864), missionary and philologist, bro. of Rev. Hubbard and Gordon, b. Williston, Vt., 11 Dec. 1789; d. Cape of Good Hope 22 Oct. 1864. Mid. Coll. 1815; And. Sem. 1818. His father Nathaniel, descended from Kenelm, who came in "The Mayflower," was a teacher, and d. Williston, Vt., 30 April, 1832, a. 80. In June, 1819, he sailed for India. After 17 years' labor at Ceylon, he founded a mission at Madras, and was pres. of the native college connected with it. Author of "Hist. of Missions," 1819; "Memoir of Harriet Winslow," 1835; "Hints on Missions to India," 1856; and in 1862, after 20 years' labor, his valuable "Dictionary of the Tamil and English Language." He also translated the Bible into Tamil, pub. several works in India, and contrib. to periodicals. His brother Gordon, many years Pr.-Ep. rector of St. Paul's, Staten Island, drowned in the Potomac 7 June, 1864.

Winterbotham, WILLIAM, assistant preacher at How's Lane, Plymouth, was arraigned for seditious words in his sermons, Nov. 5 and 8, 1792; and in July, 1793, sentenced to 4 years' imprisonment and a fine of £200. Author of "American Atlas," London, 1794; "Historical View of the U.S. and of the Europ. Settlements of America and the West Indies," 4 vols. 8vo, London, 1795; composed in prison, "View of the Chinese Empire," 8vo, 1795. — Allibone.

Winthrop, FITZ JOHN, F.R.S., gov. of Ct. from 1698 till his death, b. Ipswich, March 14, 1638; d. Boston, Nov. 27, 1707. Eldest son of Gov. John of Ct. He went to Eng., where he held a commission under the Protector Richard Cromwell in 1658, and, returning to Ct., became a representative in 1671; served as major in Philip's war, and in 1686 was one of the council of Gov. Andros. He became a magistrate of Ct. in 1689; in 1690 was app. maj.-gen. of the army designed to act against Canada, and conducted the exped. with great prudence. In 1693–8 he was agent of the Colony in Great Britain, and discharged his duties so satisfactorily, that the legisl. presented him with £500. Like his father, he was distinguished for philosophical attainments.

Winthrop, JOHN, gov. of Ms., b. Groton, Suffolk, Eng., Jan. 12, 1588; d. Boston, Mar. 26, 1649. Like his father and grandfather, he was bred to the law; at 18 was a justice of the peace, and was noted for piety and hospitality. Made gov. of the Ms. Company in 1629, and chosen to lead a colony to Ms. Bay, he converted his estate into cash, left Eng., and landed at Salem, June 12, 1630. He soon removed to Charlestown, and selected the peninsula of Shawmut as the site of Boston, and shared in the severe privations of the first year. Devoting himself assiduously to the good of the Colony, he was annually elected gov. until 1634, again in 1637–40, 1642–4, and from 1646 to his death. In 1636, when Sir Henry Vane was elected gov., Winthrop was chosen deputy-gov. Vane and Winthrop were on opposite sides in the Hutchinson controversy, and in 1637 Winthrop was chosen over Vane. He subsequently had a controversy with Vane in regard to the alien law. Again dep.-gov. 1644–5. Winthrop was opposed to an unlimited democracy; and, when the people of Ct. were forming a govt., he wrote them a letter, in which he said that "the best part of a community is always the least, and of that least part the wiser are still less." His firm and decided management of affairs sometimes made him unpopular. He bore this with equanimity, and served the State as faithfully in an inferior station as at its head. He opposed the doctrines of Anne Hutchinson and her followers, and was active in their banishment His private character was most amiable. Gov W. left 5 sons, the eldest of whom was the founder of the Saybrook Colony, and gov. of Ct. His valuable "Journal" of the public occurrences in the Ms. Colony from Mar. 29, 1630, to Jan. 11, 1649, was pub. in 1790, and, with notes by James Savage, in 1826 and 1853. He also wrote on board "The Arbella" "A Model of Christian Charity," printed in the Ms. "Hist. Colls." — See Life and Letters of Winthrop, by R. C. Winthrop, 2 vols. 8vo, 1864–7.

Winthrop, JOHN, F.R.S., gov. of Ct., son of the preceding, b. Groton, Eng., Feb. 12, 1606; d. Boston, April 5, 1676. Dublin U. 1622–5. He was in the exped. of 1627 for the relief of the Huguenots of Rochelle; in 1628 was an attaché of the embassy to Turkey; followed his father to America in 1631, and was in 1632 chosen a magistrate of Ms.; settled at Ipswich in Mar. 1633, but soon returned to Eng. In 1635 he came back with a commission under the Warwick grant, built a fort at the mouth of the Ct. River, and was constituted gov. In 1644–5 he moved his family from Boston to Pequot Harbor, where, in the following spring, he founded the city of New London. He was a magistrate in 1651; gov. from 1657 to his d. Sent to Eng. in 1661, he procured a charter from Charles II. uniting Ct. and New Haven in one Colony, and was the first gov. under it. In 1676 he visited Boston as the representative of Ct. in a congress of the United Colonies. He was an accomplished scholar, a founder of the Royal Society of London, and the author of a number of papers in the "Philosophical Transactions."

Winthrop, JOHN, LL.D. (U. of Edinb 1771), F.R.S., Hollis prof. of math. and nat philos. in H. U. 1738–79, b. Boston, 19 Dec 1714; d. Cambridge, Ms., 3 May, 1779. H.U 1732. Son of Adam Winthrop, and descendant of Gov. John. Disting. for his mathemat-

Gen. Butler at Fortress Monroe, with the rank of major. Author of "Cecil Dreeme," "John Brent," "Edwin Brothertoft," "Canoe and Saddle," "Life in the Open Air;" also a number of magazine articles, among them an account of the campaign of the N.Y. 7th Regt. in the Atlantic Monthly of June, July, and Aug. 1861.

Winthrop, WAITSTILL, maj.-gen., b. Boston, Feb. 27, 1642; d. there 7 Nov. 1717. Son of Gov. John of Ct. Member of Andros's council and of that of 1692; judge of admiralty; and chief justice of the Superior Court of Ms. His son JOHN (b. 28 Aug. 1681, d. 1 Aug. 1747; H.U. 1700) was some time a magistrate of Ct.; afterward a disting. member of the Roy. Soc. of Lond., to whose "Transactions" he was a contributor.

Wirt, WILLIAM, LL.D. (H. U. 1824), orator, lawyer, and author, b. Bladensburg, Md., Nov. 8, 1772; d. Washington, D. C., Feb. 18, 1834. His father was a Swiss, and his mother a German. Left an orphan at the age of 8 with a small patrimony, he was educated by his uncle Jasper. He resided ab. 20 months as a private tutor in the family of Benjamin Edwards, the father of Gov. Ninian Edwards of Illinois. In 1792 he commenced the practice of law at Culpepper C.H., Va.; in 1795 he m. the eldest dau. of Dr. George Gilmer, and settled at Pen Park, near Charlottesville. He there contracted dissipated habits, from which he is said to have been redeemed by listening to a sermon preached by James Waddell, whose memory he has perpetuated in his "British Spy." In 1799 his wife died, and he was soon after elected clerk of the house of delegates. He was in 1802 app. chancellor of the eastern dist. of Va., but shortly afterwards resigned this office, and, toward the close of 1803, removed to Norfolk. Just before this he wrote the letters pub. in the Richmond Argus under the title of "The British Spy," which have since been collected, and have passed through ten editions; in 1804 he pub. in the Richmond Enquirer a series of essays entitled "The Rainbow;" in 1806 he went to Richmond, and, the following year, greatly disting. himself in the trial of Aaron Burr, establishing his reputation as one of the foremost lawyers in the country; in 1807–8 he was elected to the house of delegates, in which he was a prominent advocate of the policy of Pres. Jefferson; in 1812 he wrote most of the essays originally pub. in the Richmond Enquirer under the title of "The Old Bachelor." "The Life of Patrick Henry," his longest literary production, was first pub. in 1817. In 1816 he was app. U.S. atty. for the Dist. of Va.; and in 1817–30 was atty.-gen. of the U.S.; in 1830 he removed to Baltimore. He delivered a discourse on the death of Mr. Adams and Mr. Jefferson before the citizens of Washington, Oct. 19, 1826. In 1832 he was the candidate of the anti-Masonic party for pres. of the U.S. His Life, by J. P. Kennedy, was pub. (2 vols., Phila.) 1849. His widow ELIZABETH WASHINGTON, dau. of Col. Robert Gamble (b. 30 Jan. 1784, m. 1802, d. Annapolis 24 Jan. 1857), was the author of "Flora's Dictionary," Balt. 1829.

Drummondtown, Accomac Co., Va., 3 Dec. 1806. Wash. Coll., Pa., 1825. His father, who was a lawyer, and once speaker of the house of delegates, d. 1812. His mother d. in 1813, and he was educated by relatives. Adm. to the bar at Winchester in 1828, and settled in Nashville, Tenn., but in 1830 returned to Accomac; M.C. 1833–43, and a supporter of Gen. Jackson, but, on his removal of the deposits from the U.S. Bank, went over to the opposition. Minister to Brazil 1843–7. He exerted a powerful influence over the policy of John Tyler, to whose nomination to the vice-presidency in 1840 he largely contributed. A zealous advocate of the admission of Texas into the Union. Member of the State Const. Conv. of 1850; gov. of Va. 1856–60. He joined Senator Douglas in opposing the Lecompton Constitution for Kansas. In 1859 he pub. a treatise on territorial govt., sustaining the doctrine of congressional protection of slavery. The last act of his administration was the execution of John Brown and his followers for the raid on Harper's Ferry. In the Va. convention of 13 Feb. 1861, he advocated a peaceful settlement of the difficulties with the Federal government. After the secession of Va., however, he took the commission of brig.-gen.; was defeated by Gen. J. D. Cox at Gauley Bridge; and com. at Roanoke Island, but was sick when its capture took place, 7 Feb. 1862. His son, Capt. O. J. Wise, was killed on that occasion. —See Biog. Sketch by J. P. Hambleton, 1856; d. Sep. 12, '76.

Wise, Henry Augustus, capt. U.S.N., and novelist, b. Brooklyn, N.Y., May 12, 1819; d. Naples 1 Apr. 1869. Son of George Stuart Wise, an officer of the U.S.N., who came from an old royalist family, several of whom were taken prisoners after the Penruddock Rebellion, and sent to Va. ab. 1665. At the age of 14, by the influence of his cousin Gov. Wise, he was app. a midshipman, and first sailed under Capt. John Percival, — the "Jack Percy" of his "Tales for the Marines." He served in the squadron on the coasts of Florida during the Seminole war, and, after promotion to a lieutenancy, in the Pacific, in Cal., and Mexico, during the war of 1846–8. On his return to the U.S. he m. the dau. of Edward Everett. In 1862 he was promoted to com., and made assist. chief of the bureau of ordnance and hydrography; capt. Jan. 1867; resigned his connection with the ordnance bureau, Jan. 1869. He pub. in 1849 "Los Gringos;" in 1855 "Tales for the Marines;" "Scampavias," 1857; "Capt. Brand of the Schooner Centipede," 1860.

Wise, John, minister of Ipswich, Ms., from Aug. 12, 1683, till his d. April 8, 1725. Bapt. Aug. 15, 1652. H. U. 1673. Son of Joseph of Roxbury. In 1688, for remonstrating against the grievance of taxes imposed without authority from the Assembly, he was imprisoned by Andros. After the revol. of Apr. 1689 he brought an action against Dudley, chief justice, for denying him the benefit of the habeas-corpus act. As a chaplain in the unfortunate exped. against Canada in 1690, he was disting. not only for piety, but for martial skill and an heroic spirit. He was one of the very few ministers who favored the introduction of inoculation for small-pox in 1721. In 1705 he opposed the scheme of establishing associations to be intrusted with spiritual power; and in his "Church Quarrel Espoused," pub. in 1710, — a book abounding in wit and satire, — contended that each church contained in itself all ecclesiastical authority. He was zealous and ardent in his attachment to civil and religious liberty, and was a dep. to the Assembly in Andros's administration. He pub. beside the above, ab. 1717, "A Vindication of the Govt. of the N. E. Churches," reprinted in 1772.

Wisner, Benjamin Blydenburg, D.D. (Edinb.), minister of the Old South Church, Boston, Feb. 21, 1821–1832, b. Goshen, N.Y., Sept. 29, 1794; d. Boston, Feb. 9, 1835. Un. Coll. 1813; tutor 1815–18. His father, P. B. Wisner, was one of the first settlers and founders of the church at Geneva, N.Y. The son studied law, and afterward theology, at Princeton. Ill-health caused him to leave the pulpit in 1832 for the office of sec. of the Amer. Board of Missions. Besides sermons, he pub. in 1830 "A History of the Old South Church;" "Memoirs of Mrs. S. Huntington," 1828. — Miss. Herald, 1836.

Wisner, Moses, lawyer, gov. of Mich. 1859–61, b. Aurelius, Cayuga Co., N.Y., 1818; d. Lexington, Ky., 5 Jan. 1863. He received a good education; removed to Mich. in 1839; was adm. to the bar in 1842, and was pros. atty. for Lapeer Co. in 1843–4; app. col. 22d Mich. Regt. in 1862.

Wistar, Caspar, M.D. (U. of Edinb. 1786), physician, b. Phila. 13 Sept. 1761; d. there 22 Jan. 1818. His father, a German Quaker, settled in N.J. After the battle of Germantown in 1777, he ministered to the wounded, and was in consequence led to adopt the medical profession. After studying with Dr. Redman, he attended the lectures at the U. of Pa., and in 1783–7 studied and travelled in Great Britain. Witherspoon, JOHN, D. D., LL. D., clergyman and scholar, b. Yester, near Edinburgh, Feb. 5, 1722; d. near Princeton, N. J., Nov. 15, 1794. His father, the parish minister of Yester, was a lineal descendant of John Knox by his dau. Elizabeth. The son was educated at the U. of Edinburgh; was licensed to preach at 21; and settled at Beith. When the Pretender landed in Scotland, he marched at the head of a corps of militia to Glasgow to join him; was taken prisoner at the battle of Falkirk, and imprisoned in Donne Castle, where he remained until after the battle of Culloden. In 1757 he was settled at Paisley, whence he was called in 1767 to the presidency of Princeton Coll., N. J., and was inaug. Aug. 17, 1768. He wrote an apologue entitled "History of a Corporation of Servants," &c., a narrative, under a pleasant disguise, of the church-history of Great Britain; "An Essay on Justification," 1756; and a "Serious Enquiry into the Nature and Effects of the Stage," 1757, occasioned by the performance of "Douglas," written by the clergyman Home. In 1764 he went to London, and pub. 3 vols. of "Essays on Important Subjects." He improved the finances, and raised the reputation of the college, and gave lectures on moral philos. and rhetoric, which are included in his works. In addition to his other duties, he was prof. of divinity, and pastor of the church in Princeton, during his presidency. On the opening of the war, the college was for a time broken up; when Witherspoon was delegated to the N. J. conv. for framing a State constitution, and, being sent by the Prov. Congress to the Gen. Congress at Phila., took his seat in time to sign the Decl. of Indep. He was a punctual attendant in Congress during his term of 6 years, and active on committees; member of the secret com. and of the board of war, and visited the camp to improve the state of the troops. He wrote the congressional addresses to the people, recommending fasts, and "Thoughts on American Liberty," and war-pieces in the newspapers. His "Essay on Money" was a reproduction of his speeches in Congress, where he opposed the repeated issues of paper-money. In that body his sagacity, and insight into the future, were pre-eminent. In 1781 he wrote several periodical essays on social and literary topics, entitled "The Druid." He went to Eng. in 1783 and 1784 to collect funds for the college. At the age of 70 he m. a young lady of 23. By his first wife he had a son, a major in the Revol. army, killed at the battle of Germantown. Ramsay the historian m. his dau. Wright, Frances (D'Arusmont), reformer, b. Dundee, Scotland, Sept. 6, 1795; d. Cincinnati, Dec. 14, 1852. The intimacy of her father with Adam Smith, Dr. Cullen, and other eminent literary and scientific men of his day, was probably the cause of her becoming a propagandist of social and political novelties. At the age of 18 she wrote "A Few Days in Athens," in which she defended the opinions and character of Epicurus. In 1818–21 she visited America, and pub. "Views on Society and Manners in America." She afterwards visited Paris on the invitation of Lafayette. After her return to America in 1825, she purchased 2,000 acres of land in Tenn. (subsequently the site of Memphis), and peopled it with a number of slave families whom she had redeemed, but who were subsequently removed to Hayti. In 1833–6 she lectured publicly on slavery and other social topics, with great success, in all the principal cities of the Union, incurring, however, the hostility of the press and the clergy by the freedom with which she spoke of matters both of Church and State. She then joined Robert Owen at New Harmony, editing the Gazette, and lecturing in behalf of the enterprise, but with small success. About 1838, while on another visit to France, she m. M. D'Arusmont, from whom she soon separated, subsequently residing in America with an only dau., the fruit of her marriage. She was an eccentric and daring woman, and full of benevolent enthusiasm. Her other publications were "Altorf," a tragedy, 1819; "Lectures on Free Inquiry, Religion, Morals, Opinions," &c., 1836. Her biography was pub. by John Windt, 1844; and by Amos Gilbert, 8vo, Cin. 1855.

Educated chiefly under the supervision of his mother, — a woman of uncommon knowledge, and strength of mind. The death of both parents before he was 21, and the uncontrolled possession of a large fortune, led him for some time into a career of extravagance and dissipation. At the age of 30, however, his conduct underwent an entire change: he gave his assiduous attention to the study of law; was adm. to the bar in 1757, where his learning, industry, and eloquence made him eminent. As early as 1758, and for several years previous to the Revol., he was a prominent member of the house of burgesses as the representative of Wm. and Mary Coll., of which he was prof. of law in 1779–89. In 1764 he drew up a strong remonstrance to the house of commons against the Stamp Act, the tone of which was greatly modified by the Assembly. In Aug. 1775, he was app. a deleg. to Congress, of which he was an influential member until 1777. In Nov. 1776 he was app., with Jefferson (who had been his pupil in the law) and others, to revise the laws of Va., in which they made important changes. In 1777 he was chosen speaker of the house of delegates, and was app. judge of the High Court of Chancery of the State. On the re-organization of the Court of Equity, he was app. sole chancellor, which station he filled more than 20 years. In 1788 he was a member of the Va. Conv. which ratified the Federal Constitution, — during the debates, generally acting as chairman, — and was a strenuous advocate of the instrument adopted. His death was occasioned by poison; but the person suspected was acquitted by a jury. In the latter part of his life he emancipated his slaves, and furnished them means of subsistence. Author of "Decisions by the High Court of Chancery," &c., 1795; second ed., with Memoir by B. B. Minor, 8vo, 1852. LL.D. (Wm. and Mary Coll. 1790).
